NEWS NOTES.

The motion to quash the local option by-law in the town of Renfrew failed.

Hepburn Bros., Picton have sold their motor boat "El" to Stanley Carman, of Belleville.

The inaugural meeting of Picton Cheese Board was held on Friday last 237 cheese were boarded and sold at 11 5-16c.

The local option by-law of the township of Dunwich was quashed by Justice Riddell, on the grounds the notice had been improperly posted.

Sir Richard Cartwright, continuously in public life since 1863, wants to see an alliance between Great Britain, the United States and the colonies, which will make the rest of the world behave.

Negotiations are now under way between the city of Kingston and the North America Smelting Company, which will likely result in the erection there of a smelter at a cost of about $75,000.

Robert Parker, of Tweed, the old grey-headed man suspected of shooting Wm. Masters, his next door neighbor, on Friday morning, April 8, will have to stand his trial upon the charge of murder at the Assizes, to be held there next fall.

Children Cry FOR FLETCHER'S CASTORIA

Levi Bradshaw, proprietor of the Victoria Hotel at Tweed, was summoned before Magistrate James, charged with selling liquor contrary to the local option by-law. Charges were proved and Bradshaw was fined $200 and costs.

During an electric storm, on Monday afternoon, John C. Steen a farmer residing on Prince Albert road, Chatham township, was struck by lightning and instantly killed. Steen had gone into the field with his daughter to cover some chicken coops, when he was struck.

TOWN COUNCIL.

Council Chamber,
May 2nd, 1910.

Council met in regular session on Monday evening. Mayor T. W. Simpson presiding.

Present—Reeve Alexander, and Councillors Osborne, Waller, Hawley and Kimmerly.

The minutes of the last regular session were read and confirmed.

A communication was read from S. C. Shorey, secretary of the Napanee Cheese Board, thanking the Mayor and Council for their kindness in supplying the Board with a meeting place.

Accepted and filed.

A communication was read from Frank H. Perry asking to be appointed tax collector for the year 1910.

Laid on the table until next meeting of council.

A communication was read from a number of citizens complaining about a stagnant pool of water lying on the land owned by Mrs. Fralick on the south side of Thomas street. Nearly all the land in that vicinity has been raised by filling in, and the surface water forms on Mrs. Fralick's property, which has not been filled in, and because there is no drainage to carry it away, becomes stagnant and decidedly unhealthy. The council was of the opinion that it was a case for the Board of Health to deal with, consequently the matter was referred to them.

A petition for a sewer on Dundas street to commence at the corner of Donald street and run east to the permanent sewer, nearly opposite Wm. Rankin's property, was read and laid on the table until later in the evening.

The Official Board of the Western Church petitioned the council for a granolithic walk around the church property to be constructed by the town on the terms usual with such walks.

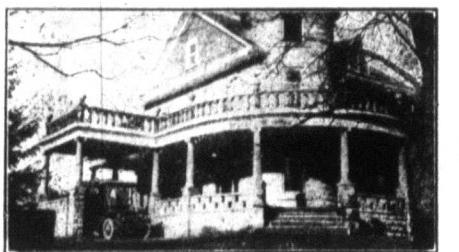

Referred to the Streets Committee to report.

M. A. Duffett and others petitioned the council for a granolithic walk on the north side of Bridgestreet, between John and East streets. The petitioners left it to the judgment of the council whether the walk should be laid down outside the trees or not and suggested that the walk be five feet wide. They asked that the walk be built as soon as possible and agreed to share the usual proportionate cost of building the same.

Referred to the Streets Committee to report.

Reeve Alexander presented the treasurer's April statement which is as follows :

about 250 liquor dealers in the Province of Ontario. Saturday, April 30th, was the last day upon which liquor could be legally sold upon 250 premises formerly under license. On January 3rd last, 77 municipalities in Ontario carried local option by-laws, cutting off 203 licenses, which came into force on Monday. In a number of other places license reduction by-laws have been passed or the license commissioners have reduced the licenses. By these means at least forty or more barrooms must close. Altogether about one-eighth of all the barrooms that were left in the province went out of business Monday.

J. L. BOYES,

TRENTON ELECTRIC POWER.

The ratepayers of Napanee have before them one of the most important, if not the most important question they have been called upon to consider for many years. Namely a proposed contract between the town and the Trenton Power Company, for a twenty-four hour electric service. The matter is now in the hands of the Napanee Water and Electric Light Commissioners, and we are perfectly safe in saying, and the ratepayers can rest assured that no contract will be placed before them for their support and endorsement, but which will be of great benefit to the municipality, and in their best interest.

In all important matters such as this it is a question of facts and figures, and benefits to accrue from the adoption of such a measure. Too much information cannot be given in this matter and we desire to demonstrate that by the adoption and passing of this measure there will be many great benefits. In the first place we will briefly cite the existing arrangements. Many of our readers are doubtless aware as to what they are, but we give them for comparison. They provide for a service from sun-down to sunrise for household and street lighting, with a moonlight schedule for the streets. This means out of twenty-four hours the service is available for from fifteen hours in the winter to eleven hours in the summer. For this purpose a man is employed to be on hand at the power house just to keep up steam. For this the town pays for fuel alone the sum of nearly $4,500 per annum.

down to sunrise for housemen and street lighting, with a moonlight schedule for the streets. This means out of twenty-four hours the service is available for from fifteen hours in the winter to eleven hours in the summer. For this purpose a man is employed to be on hand at the power house just to keep up steam. For this the town pays for fuel alone the sum of nearly $4,500 per annum.

To-day no factor, yields so great an influence, or holds so high a place in manufacturing industries or domestic life as electricity, and any city or town desiring to hold an important position must avail itself of every possible opportunity for advancement. It will not do to sit quietly down and say "Oh I guess we are good enough; I think we will do with what we have." No one on a farm to-day would be satisfied to eat his grain with a cradle, nor would a merchant wish to adopt the same principles in business which were in vogue twenty-five years ago. The same rule applies to manufacturing industries and domestic life.

The Trenton Power Company agree to supply electric energy to the Municipality of Napanee for $3,500 per annum. The town is to provide a sub station into which the company run their receiving wires. The contract is to run for a period of ten years, renewable. The minimum horse power is 125 and can be increased from time to time as necessity requires. All out going energy is measured and collections are made by the Trenton Power Company. It will be seen the saving there will be to the town, which will in four years pay off the outlay in the erection of the substation. In this station a competent man must be employed to the satisfaction of the Electric Power Company.

Now what are the benefits to be derived from a twenty-four hour service.

The first and most important to the town would be for manufacturing purposes. The question of power is always one of serious proportions with manufacturing industries of to-day. They always locate near a railway or navigable portion of a river. In nine chances out of ten the company or industry desires to secure cheap power, and will always locate in a place where electric energy is available. Now every ratepayer knows that as a shipping port Napanee is well situated, and has the advantage of a navigable river and railway connection with east and west. If a twenty-four hour electric power were available many industries could be induced to locate here, which are otherwise beyond our reach.

During the past few years a new step has been taken in house cleaning by the advent of the electric vacuum cleaner, with this the ordinary dread of house cleaning is done away because carpets, curtains and fixtures can be cleaned without removing them from their places, and the cleaner can be placed in any part of the house. This can only be done on the twenty-four hour electric service, whereas at present the service is only available at night.

Another advantage in house hold work will be the ability to do ironing with an electric iron and thus do away with the hot stove during the summer months.

With the present service in the event of a thunder storm arising in the middle of the day and the dining room becoming dark at lunch hour, lamps or gas must be resorted to when with the twenty-four hour service light would always be available.

Many are the advantages from an all day electric service and it will be to the interest of the town and every ratepayer to strongly support the undertaking.—Com.

Shipments of rubber during 1909 amounted to 1,492,580 pounds, and the crop for 1910 is estimated at 3,000,000 pounds. Record prices were obtained for rubber, the highest being 9s. 3½d. in London, and
Rs. 7.20 in Colombo.

The cacao crop for 1909 is 80,100 hundred weight. The estimate for 1910 is 700,000 hundred weight.

Cardamoms, which have been extensively advertised in the United States of America, which is now Ceylon's fourth largest customer as regards this product, fetched good prices, and 750,000 pounds were sold. For this year 650,000 pounds are estimated.

Cocoanut palm products (oil, copra, coprac, coir, etc.) have also done remarkably well.

HOW TO MAKE BABY SLEEP

The baby that cries half the night does not cry for nothing. It cries because it is not well, and has no other means of saying so. The chances are the trouble is due to some upsetting of the stomach or bowels, which would be speedily removed if the child were given a dose of Baby's Own Tablets. These Tablets make children sleep soundly and naturally because they remove the cause of the crossness and wakefulness. They are a blessing to children and a relief to worried mothers. Mrs. John Sickles, Douglastown, N. B., says: "If anything aids my little ones the first thing I give them is a dose of Baby's Own Tablets and they are soon well again." Sold by medical dealers or by mail at 25 cents

dicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Away With Depression and Melancholy. These two evils are the accompaniment of a disordered stomach and torpid liver and mean wretchedness to all whom they visit.
The surest and speediest way to combat them is with Parmentier's

the healthful action of the stomach their usefulness in thousands of relief to the suffering who are wise

THE UNSEWN WITNESS

The lecturer was growing very vehement in the course of his oratory.
His subject was, "How to be happy though married."

"As we all know," he cried, "the duty of a wife is to be a loving helpmate to her husband by cooking his food, attending to the various requirements, conducting properly his household affairs, and so on,
and so on!"

"Ah," sighed the little man in front, "they never perform that last duty."

"Which one is that?" asked the lecturer.

"Why," explained the little man,
"sew on, and sew on!" and he exhibited his shirt cuffs, which were fastened with pins.

scandalizing our neighbors, and,
moreover, not listening to a note of Meyerbeer's music. It is real sacrilege."

"Are you very anxious to listen to this divine music?" asked M.
Borisoff, who began to thing Madame de Garches worth more than all the operas in the world.

"Exceedingly, though I know it by heart," replied the incomparable brunette, turning toward the stage.

The change was not acceptable to the two messieurs. Borisoff especially was enticed by the indiscreet words she had let drop; more over, he thought her ravishing. He could never remember to have met with a woman who charmed him so much, and at the same time excited his curiosity. He was devoted body and soul to the government he served, but he had not given in his resignation as a man of intrigue—this skilful and gallant colonel.
To please an adorable creature and make use of his conquest to regain the esteem of the chief of the Third Section, what a dream!
But the point was not yet reached.
To arrange his batteries so as to profit by the situation, would not be very easy even for diplomats, and he almost despaired of success.
But Ivan Ivanovitch, who had no misgivings, encouraged him by look and gesture; while Madame de Garches, leaning on the front of her box, was absorbed in a musical reverie.

The subtle Ivan was unconscious that Maxime Borgeres was prowling in the corridor like a lion waiting for his prey.

Maxime had decided to come out from the depths of the orchestra, that he might watch more nearly the suspicious creatures who occupied his thoughts. He was revolving in his mind a crowd of contradictory projects. He wished not to lose sight of Madame Sergeant, and at the same time to avoid being seen by her. A police agent would have been perplexed how to attain this double end, much more Maxime, complete novice that he was in such matters, who had always come off worsted in his encounters with the thief of the bracelet,—even with Col. Borisoff.

Mouriatine, far from thinking of him, was seeking to recover the thread of an interesting conversation, and the colonel meanwhile admired the Greek profile and golden complexion of Madame de Garches.

Suddenly she changed her attitude and turned toward her adorer.
"Do you know what I am thinking of?" she asked abruptly.

"I only know that I am thinking of you."

"Never. I have declared my independence and wish no master
even temporarily. I am alone, I repeat, and if you doubt it, I invite you to supper this evening at my house."

"Do you know that I have a great mind to accept?" said the colonel, laughing.

"If you refused, you would dis-oblig me exceedingly. I should think you were distrustful of my cuisine. I assure you it is excellent, and the wines I shall offer you will not be improvised. I am expected every evening and arrangements are made to include a few friends. I must add that I am a horrible gourmande."

"Then you are perfect," said Mouriatine; "a pretty woman who loves a good table is so rare."

been massacred. But his mistress exacted of him the sacrifice of his honor, and he yielded."

"In other words, to make him self agreeable to her, he stole."

"Something of that sort, and the unfortunate young man was cruelly punished. He was compelled to flee, or at least he has disappeared, and the woman concerns herself no more about him."

"Was he a Russian?" asked Mou-riatine with an indifferent air.

"No, he is French. But I left Paris and do not know the end of the story. I should be glad to hear the denouement."

"Nothing prevents you from instituting inquiries now that you have returned."

"The woman has probably left France. Besides, it was a sorrowful adventure, and I came to Paris for amusement. I should like for a few days to lead the life of a young man. You laugh? I am quite serious. I have an insane desire to sup, to get intoxicated, to frequent public balls."

"Not alone, I hope?"

"Why not? It would be the true way to amuse myself. But I do not know that I shall venture."

"Should you like to be accompanied by two discreet cavaliers?"

"You and your friend, you mean?"

"Precisely. I assure you, you could not do better. We seek only amusement and will act as your es-orts, with that view only."

"If I was sure of it—"

"Doubt nothing. When shall we begin? This evening?"

"This evening there is no masked ball anywhere."

"We may sup, nevertheless, and if it suits you to sup in that house in Rue de Vigny, that you have observed—"

"Thanks. I sup only at a restaurant or at home."

"At home! I thought you were only here in passing."

"That is true, but I have a house furnished as if I resided in it all the year round. It is not far from yours. Are you familiar with Rue Jouffroy?"

"Rue Jouffroy?" repeated Borisoff.

"Yes, between the Boulevard
Malesherbes and the Avenue de Villiers. I have there a lodging not equal to your palace in Rue de Vigny but which suffices for me, alone as I am."

"And the general?" asked Mou-riatine, laughing.

"The general has never set foot
there, thank heaven. I tolerated him as a travelling companion. I should not endure him in Paris."

"And you have given him no successor?"

"Never. I have declared my independence and wish no master
even temporarily. I am alone, I repeat, and if you doubt it, I invite you to supper this evening at
my house."

"Do you know that I have a great mind to accept?" said the
colonel, laughing.

"If you refused, you would dis-oblig me exceedingly. I should think you were distrustful of my
cuisine. I assure you it is excellent, and the wines I shall offer you
will not be improvised. I am expected every evening and arrangements are made to include a few friends. I must add that I am a horrible gourmande."

"Then you are perfect," said
loves a good table is so rare."

"I am going to excite your enthusiasm. Know that I have a cellar of the first order. I hope you will no longer hesitate to come and try my wines."

Borisoff said not a word, though his companion consulted him with his eyes. He desired nothing better than to sup with the incomparable blonde, but would have preferred it should be at his own house.

"Well," she said, after a short silence, "I see that my proposition does not please you. We will say nothing more about it."

"But if," said Mauriatine, "I should agree to accept it and gladly!"

"Your friend is not so inclined, and I cannot resent his reserve. He scarcely knows me, and considering the progress Nihilism is making he does well to be prudent."

"What has Nihilism to do with the pleasant party you propose?"

"How do you know I am not one of that sect? Have I not just acknowledged that I know a woman who is,—and a thief if you please. From thence to conspiring is but one step."

"Why do you take pleasure in making game of us?"

"I speak very seriously."

"Then you wish to convince us that if we want to pass our evening with you we should run the risk of falling into a den of revolutionary bandits?" said Mauriatine, with a burst of laughter. "Why not try to persuade us that we should share the fate of those who sat down to the table of Lucrezia Borgia?"

The Nihilists in petticoats are capable of anything—the colonel himself has said so—anything—even to serving their enemies with poisoned wines."

"Dear madame," said Borisoff, who had just determined on his line of action, "you attribute ideas to me that have never entered my head. I am yours too entirely for discretion. I should be delighted to follow you anywhere, and for the pleasure of supping with you, no matter where, would sup with all the conspirators in the universe were they guilty of the blackest crimes."

TRAVELLING ARMY KITCHEN.

Soldiers May Now Have Hot Rations—Cook for 800 Men.

Cold tinned meat for troops in warfare will soon disappear from the list of the hardships of active service. The use of the motor vehicle and the invention of a means of cooking tinned or fresh meat while moving rapidly have received the approval of the authorities. An Irish quartermaster has invented a travelling kitchen, fixed in an ordinary wagon, which can cook for 800 men as it moves with them, and at the first halt in a forced march a hot meal can be served at once.

By the application of motor power, the radius of these travelling stoves can be increased enormously in dealing with scattered troops, and it should be possible for men in the most lonely outpost situations to be served with hot food instead of eating the cold rations which they carry with them. These kitchens are so balanced that they keep upright when passing over the roughest ground without spilling or risk of turning over. The field kitchen is an oil fuel one, without spark or smoke.

CURED HIS BLADDER TROUBLE.

KING'S REVENUE GROWS.

Good Management Has Improved
Duchy of Lancaster.

Before King Edward left London for Biarritz he learned that his revenue as Duke of Lancaster, the title under which he is staying in Biarritz, was increased last year by $8,000, bringing it up to $320,000 for the year. The result has not been attained without a good deal of thrift, but King Edward has the capacity of choosing excellent managers for his private affairs, and the result is the Duchy of Lancaster is proving one of the most profitable of his estates.

The Prince of Wales also finds himself richer this year than last from the revenue of his Cornwall duchy, which has been raised from $412,500 to $435,000.

Lachute Man, After Fourteen

Strength in an Old Reliable Kidney Remedy.

Lachute, Que., April 18 (Special)—After fourteen years of suffering, which started from pleurisy, followed by dropsical swellings, and culminated in Lumbago, and confined him to his bed, Malachi F. McAuliffe, a well-known resident of this place, has entirely recovered his health, and he says without hesitation, "I am sure I owe it entirely to Dodd's Kidney Pills."

"I was laid up with Pleurisy, which affected my kidneys," Mr. McAuliffe continues. "I suffered a great deal of pain, especially in my back. I was also terribly troubled with dropsical swellings, and finally, after many attempts to get rid of my trouble, I found myself compelled to give up and was confined to my bed with Lumbago. I tried many medicines but they failed to do me any good. Then I turned to Dodd's Kidney Pills, and after taking one box I felt greatly relieved. I took several more boxes and found myself completely cured."

Dodd's Kidney Pills always cure any and all forms of Kidney Disease.

ELECTRIC CURFEW.

As the Clock Strikes Eight All the Town's Lights Go Out.

The Corporation of Durban, South Africa, has revived the curfew in a modern form.

Instead of ringing a bell as a warning to citizens to extinguish all lights, an official at the corporation's electric works, punctually on the stroke of 8 o'clock every night, momentarily switches off all lights himself.

For a second or two the town is plunged in darkness, and the object of the idea is to give everyone a chance setting watches and clocks to the correct time. The inhabitants appreciate the innovation highly.

THE FOLLY OF OUR WAYS.
Like men who move with sightless eyes,

We stumble through our days,
And leave our souls to emphasize
The folly of our ways.

Time and again the drunkard's lips
Indulge their low desire,
And all the time he slips and slips
Into a hopeless mire.

Time and again the spendthrift's hands

Are busy wasting all;
While surely move the shifting sands

That bear him to his fall.

Time and again the gambler takes
The risks of reckless play;
While in his heart the canker makes
Its all-destroying way.

Time and again we give to those
We love the words that pain;
While through the mill our conscience goes

Till we are friends again.

Some day, perhaps—it may not be Till in our twilight days,
Too late to alter—we shall see
The folly of our ways.

PERISHED IN HOTEL FIRE

Twelve Lives Were Sacrificed in a Cornwall Holocaust.

THE DEAD.

Charles Gray, manager Ives Bedding Company; his wife and two children, aged 6 and 8.

Ben Fielding, accountant, Sterling Bank.

Charles Gagne, teller Bank of Montreal.

Mrs. Taylor Archibald, aged 70, an invalid.

Wm. Hume, waiter, of Montreal. Ernest Buller, bellboy, of Montreal.

Marie and Jennie Oliver, waitresses at the hotel for twelve years.

Mrs. Goeller of Philadelphia, a kitchen employee.

Six bodies are still in the debris.

A despatch from Cornwall says: Twelve human lives blotted out and a property loss that $250,000 will scarcely cover is the record of a fire which broke out at 3 o'clock on Friday morning in the Rossmore Hotel, destroyed that structure and damaged a number of leading business establishments. Breaking out in the Rossmore Hotel the fire spread with great rapidity, baffling for hours the efforts of the fire brigade and hundreds of citizens.

Three score persons, 20 being commercial men, and the others permanent guests and employees of the hotel, were sleeping in the Rossmore. Of this number fully fifteen, clad only in their night-robes, reached the ground by means of sliding down ropes, with lacerated and bleeding hands.

One entire family was wiped out in the catastrophe, the remains of Chas. C. Gray, managing director of the Ives Modern Bedstead Co., with his wife and two children, having been found in the smouldering ruins. Mrs. Gray was in delicate health, and, while the facts will never be known, it is believed that it was in a desperate effort to save Mrs. Gray and the children that Gray himself perished. Pitiful, too, was the death of Mrs. W. Taylor Archibald, an aged invalid, who had for years resided at the Rossmore, and who, through her weakness and infirmity, was unable to escape when the warning was given.

Cool heroism on the part of William Fitzgibbon, president of the Cornwall Lacrosse Club, resulted in the saving of several lives. Assisted by the watchman's outcry he woke up young Fielding and showed him how he might escape. Fielding, however, became confused and, trying to get out by the regular exit, was suffocated. Fitzgibbon then broke a skylight above the servants' quarters and by means of a ladder managed to bring three of the dining-room girls to the roof, whence all fled to safety in their nightclothes.

Judge O'Reilly and his wife had a narrow escape in their plucky rescue of young Harry, their son, who has been ill with pneumonia. They were able to drag the boy from his room and then over the roof of Larmour's dry goods store beyond the reach of the flames.

The night clerk claims to have found fire while on his hourly rounds, when, as he stepped from the kitchen to the rotunda, he was met with a burst of fire that swept up the main stairway. He at once ran up through corridors, awakening the inmates, one of whom, A. F. Birchard, of the high school staff, rushed in his night clothes to the nearest alarm box. The hotel, of 4 storeys, was splendidly equipped with fire escapes, fire ropes, night watch and a watchman's clock.

Burning embers carried by the draft created by the flames flew through the air. The Rossmore was soon a seething furnace, with no possibility of being saved, and efforts were turned by the firemen in other directions. The flames spread to the Colquhoun block and the upper portion of this was quickly gutted. In both the Rossmore and Colquhoun buildings were several business establishments, which suffered heavily, either through the fire or the flood of water which was poured in. The Yates building was also badly scorched.

Murder at Smith's Falls by Rufus Weedmark.

A despatch from Smith's Falls, Ont., says: A cruel murder was committed here on Saturday morning in a little frame house on Main street, when Mrs. Rufus Weedmark was choked to death by her husband. The crime is the result of an unhappy domestic life extending over a number of years, in which drinking, jealousy and quarrelling seem to have been almost the daily portion. A despatch from Ottawa says: The License Commissioners of Ottawa on Thursday cut off twelve liquor licenses out of the eighty-eight existing licenses, and granted only three months' extension in six cases, which may or may not be extended. The Canadian Pacific Railway has issued their sixth crop bulletin which shows that satisfactory progress with seeding has been made during the past week. In Manitoba 81 per cent. of wheat has been sown; in Saskatchewan 80 per cent. and in Alberta 82 per cent. At a number of points seeding is practically completed. Some delay took place last week by frost at night and high winds during the day, but no material damage was done to the crop. In Alberta the weather has been warm and dry and rain would be beneficial at a number of points.

Conductor Reynolds' Train Shaken Up Near Spanish River.

A despatch from North Bay says: C. P. R. No. 71 Soo express was speeding along near Spanish Station on Saturday when a sudden shock and crash of timbers announced that an accident had taken place. The trouble occurred with the forward coaches, which were derailed from some cause as yet unknown. Conductor Tom Reynolds, whose actions at the Spanish River accident won him royal recognition and the Albert Medal, was in charge, and at the first sign of trouble applied the emergency brakes. The accident, happening to the same train, with the same conductor and in the same locality, aroused great interest locally, and wild rumors were soon flying, an unhappy domestic life extending over a number of years, in which drinking, jealousy and quarrelling seem to have been almost the daily portion. Weedmark is a man about fifty-two years of age and has a large and respectable family connection here and in this vicinity. He is a laborer, but for the past few years he has lived a very irregular life, and, it is said, drank very heavily. His wife was a hard-working woman and went out to do charwork to support the family.

A despatch from Victoria, B. C., says: More than one hundred Japanese were killed on April 3 when an avalanche plunged down Sunagase Hill according to reports received here on Wednesday. New G. T. R. Train Between Montreal and Toronto.

A despatch from Montreal says: It is reported here that the Grand Trunk Railway Co. have decided to make an important cut in the running time between this city and Toronto. At present the best time made is by the "International Limited," which does the run in seven and a half hours. Next season it is proposed to put on a flyer, to leave Montreal at 1:30 p.m., and make the trip in six hours or less; which means that a passenger will be able to lunch in Montreal and dine in Toronto. The new train will be the fastest for the length of the run (333 miles) on the continent, eclipsing the famous "Twentieth Century Limited" between New York and Chicago.

BLAZE AT WINNIPEG.

Big Grocery Warehouse Damaged Very Seriously.

A despatch from Winnipeg says: Fire in the warehouse of Foley Bros., Larsen & Co., wholesale grocers, on Friday night did damage estimated at between $250,000 and $300,000. The fire was discovered about 8:30 in the spice room on the third floor, and quickly spread to the fifth floor at the top of the building, where it found ready material in the heavy stock of matches, woodenware and fibre-ware. The roof soon fell in, and the whole of the stock in one-third of the building is a complete loss from flames and water. Loss fully covered by insurance, much of which is carried by American companies.

British Finance Bill Enters Upper House Again.

A despatch from London says: Chancellor Lloyd-George's finance bill, the rejection of which by the House of Lords cost the nation, as Premier Asquith announced in his final speech on Wednesday, $6,500,000 in actual money, passed the third reading in the House of Commons by a majority of ninety-three, amid enthusiastic cheers from the Ministerialists. It was immediately carried to the House of Lords, which was waiting in session to receive it, and in quite uneventful fashion the Lords passed the first reading of the bill.

SMALLPOX AT COBALT.

Provincial Health Authorities See No Cause for Alarm.

A despatch from Toronto says: A report that smallpox is epidemic in Cobalt does not alarm Dr. R. W. Bell, chief inspector of the provincial board of health. There were a few cases some days ago, but there were not over a dozen. The report current some weeks ago that there were 50 or 60 cases up there was absurd. There were only five or six. He thought this rumor was similar to that one. Everything was under control so far as he knew. They have an isolation hospital there, and competent medical men.

An Aeroplane Manoeuvred Over British Vessels.

A despatch from London says: The fleet of British warships anchored off Sheerness had a novel experience on Saturday when an aeroplane from the Aero Club aviation ground at East Church suddenly appeared out of the haze and manoeuvred over the vessels at varying heights. After making a deliberate reconnaissance the aerial craft disappeared. The aeroplane which startled the navy officers was piloted by Cecil Grace. After leaving the harbor it flew nearly fifty miles in fifty-one minutes, rising at one time to a height of 1,500 feet.

Clings to Pulpwood Policy in Spite of United States' Efforts.

A despatch from Washington says: Efforts of the United States to have modified in some way the new pulpwood policy of the Province of Quebec have been unsuccessful. United States Consul Foster at Ottawa has telegraphed to the State Department that Sir Wilfrid Laurier on Tuesday informed him that Quebec Province declined to modify the new law. This measure prohibits the export of timber cut on Crown lands, except in manufactured form, such as pulp and commercial lumber. Considerable loss to American paper mills will be caused by the new law which goes into effect May 1.

THE NEW MILLING COMPANY.

Ontario is certainly going to play a very prominent part in the future of the Milling industry in Canada.

And so it is that we find that the new big Ontario milling concern which will be known as the Maple Leaf Milling Co., Limited, will absorb the Maple Leaf Flour Mills Co., Ltd., and with it the Hedley Shaw Milling Co., has already under way the construction of a 6,000-barrel mill, a million bushel elevator, and storage warehouse out on the new pier that have been constructed at Port Colborne. Naturally it takes a pile of money to carry through such big undertakings, and the men who are at the head of the new Company, including Mr. Cawthra Mulock, of Toronto; Mr. Hedley Shaw, founder and head of the Hedley Shaw Milling Co., and Mr. D. C. Cameron, the Western lumberman who organized the Maple Leaf Flour Mills Co., Ltd., have supplied $1,000,000 of additional cash capital, which besides permitting of the completion of the entire new plant already under way at Port Colborne, and the construction of some 15 new elevators throughout the West, will provide the new Company with further working capital to go right ahead and get its full share of the larger business that is offering, not only throughout Canada, but more especially in Great Britain and various foreign markets.

Three Elevator Companies Found Guilty are Fined.

A despatch from Ottawa says: The report of Warehouse Commissioner Cassells, who was commissioned by the Trade and Commerce Department last month to investigate charges of fraudulent returns by elevator companies at Fort William and Port Arthur in connection with short weights for grain, has been received by the Minister. Mr. Cassells briefly notes that as a result of the investigation before Magistrate Daly in Winnipeg fines aggregating $5,550 have been imposed as follows: The Empire Elevator Company of Fort William, $3,000; Port Arthur Elevator Company, $2,500; Consolidated Company, Fort William, $50. The returns furnished by the C. P. R. Elevator Company were found to be correct. It is understood that action to cancel the licenses of the companies will be taken by the department in case the present warning has not been sufficient, and it is found that fraudulent returns are made in the future.

LONDON TO MANCHESTER

Great Aerial Race Won by Louis Paulhan With a Single Stop.

A despatch from London, England, says: The great aerial Derby from London to Manchester was won on Thursday morning by Louis Paulhan, who descended on the field chosen, at Didsbury, at 5.32, completing his journey of 186 miles with but a single stop. His actual time in the air was three hours and 56 minutes. The second part of his journey, 67 miles, was covered in 67 minutes. Graham White, Paulhan's rival, made his first descent 60 miles from his starting point, and when he retired to rest was 56 miles behind Paulhan. He was up again at midnight, though, and started at 3.10, while it was still quite dark, in a valiant attempt to overtake his opponent. Despite the difficulties and dangers entailed by night flight, he made 26 miles in 40 minutes, but was forced to descend at Polesworth because of motor trouble.

The records of aviation show nothing to parallel the contest between Louis Paulhan and Graham E. White for the blue ribbon of the air. The London Daily Mail's $50,000 prize for the first aeroplane flight from London to Manchester. Paulhan started from Hempstead at 5.31 p.m. on Wednesday, alighted at Trent Valley, near Lichfield five minutes after the aeroplane. It was then quite dark.

He passed over Harrow, Watford, Bletchley, Wolverton, Rugby and Nuneaton. It was dark when the great aeroplane came gently to earth near Lichfield, after the most remarkable flight yet recorded in the history of aviation.

Futile Attempt at Scandal.

Another attempt to prove a scandal was made in the House last week by Mr. O. S. Crotchet, Conservative, from New Brunswick, over what is Seller was Conservative.

Mr. O'Leary is a prominent Conservative and his evidence on the stand was contradicted by a letter giving the above facts, which were put in evidence.

Government Bought Property.

Mr. Murray subsequently sold the wharf to the government for $5,000, and this transaction constituted the alleged scandal. An attempt to prove that the Minister of Public Works knew what was going on, and was in fact a party to the whole transaction, was not supported by any evidence taken before the Public Accounts committee. It was in the attempt to connect the minister with the transaction that the scandal consisted; and this attempt utterly failed.

Big Offer For It.

A local firm, Messrs. Loggie, offered to purchase the wharf from the government for $5,000; but the government refused to sell. Finally the deputy minister asked them if they would buy two-thirds of the wharf for $3,500, which they agreed to do. This transaction has been completed. The government retains 200 feet next to the municipal wharf (which had already been purchased), at a cost of $1,500.

Sold Part at a Profit.

The feature of the transaction is that the government paid $5,000 for a wharf property, were offered $5,500 for it immediately by local people, but refused the offer. They afterwards sold two-thirds of it for $3,500, securing a desirable property in the public interest for the small sum of $1,500. This is what is known as the "Sawdust Wharf" scandal, and it represents the session's labors of one Conservative member of parliament.

Manitoba Boundary Again.

The Conservative members from Manitoba again raised the question of increase of the boundaries of Manitoba. This makes a very complicated situation for the two Conservative provinces of Ontario and Manitoba. Manitoba wants to cut a slice off the western boundary of Ontario, bringing the eastern boundary of Manitoba to the vicinity of Fort William, and Ontario wants to extend her boundaries to include Fort Churchill on Hudson Bay.

Impossible Demand.

In addition to this Manitoba wanted control of the public lands in the old boundaries as well as the new, which would disturb the basis upon which Manitoba entered confederation. To this the Dominion government could not agree.

Gross Misrepresentation.

In 1908 Messrs. Rogers and Campbell of Manitoba, interviewed members of the Dominion government on the subject of these boundaries, but could not agree upon terms. They returned however and made an astounding report of the conference—among other things, saying that Sir Wilfrid Laurier had offered the sum of $10,000 as being sufficient to administer the ex-government of Manitoba looking to an extension of boundaries. Roblin, Rogers & Co., however don't want an increase in boundaries. They want a grievance.

Liberal Literature Hurts.

The franking of literature again came up for discussion by the Conservatives. They objected to the franking privilege being extended to a certain weekly political letter issued by the Liberal party.

Faked Up a Case.

In support of their contention they produced an envelope stamped 10 March, 1910, and a document which it was stated was enclosed in the envelope. As a matter of fact, the literature produced was mailed from Ottawa last December, so that it could not by any chance have been enclosed in the envelope produced to the house. So that in this respect the house was grossly deceived.

Was Within the Law.

Then again, the literature alluded to, if mailed either in March or December was entitled to the franking privilege under the law, the house being in session.

Conservatives Do the Same.

Once more—this literature stands in this respect in precisely the same position as the literature prepared by the Conservative party which is franked every week.

Another point is that a minister's frank is good the whole year, and all mailable matter may be franked by him without any violation of the law.

A great point was made of this by the Conservatives. It is strange that they did not discuss the subject of Mr. Borden mailing his correspondence out during recess, under a frank, he not being a minister of the Crown. The only way Mr. Borden can get around the law is to frank it as an official of the government.

Franked Sack of Oats.

It developed during the discussion that a Conservative member had caused a sack of oats to be franked from the House of Commons. By no stretch of even Conservative imagination could this sack of grain he described as mailable matter.

What History Tells.

It is upon such trivial matters as these that the time of the House is wasted. Time was when the corridors of the House were blocked with campaign literature sent out by the Conservatives and they threatened to keep the House in session until it was all franked unless it was allowed to go whether the House rose or not.

Ultimately two special trains were provided by the postmaster-general to get rid of the stuff, which was paralyzing the mails.

Patent Medicine Ads. Franked.

It has not been forgotten that in 1896, the Conservative party sent out campaign literature by the ton with a patent medicine advertisement on one side of it, all of this was franked by Conservative members.

The new members upon the Conservative side should read up the political history of their party, and they would find that with respect to all these matters the Liberal party compares most favorably with their party.

Growth of Canada's Trade.

Canada's trade is surely growing by leaps and bounds. The figures for the fiscal year ending last month, reached the record of $677,142,189. This is an increase of no less than $117,506,238 over the figures for the previous year, or over twenty per cent.

Touches Top Notch.

It is more than $26,000,000 over the highest previous figures of 1907-8. At nothing of our public men, that they would become instant converts to Liberalism and succumb quickly to the sunny smile of the Prime Minister.

Will All Become Liberals.

The thousands of Americans who have decided to make their homes in the West will ally themselves to one political party or the other, and every reason exists why their support should be given to the government which opened up the great West, provided transportation, school accommodation, and preserves law and order. These men will feel they owe a debt of gratitude to the Liberal government, and the very best political move that could be made, is the proposed western tour of the Premier and his colleagues.

It is to be hoped that nothing will occur to prevent such a tour, and the welcome members of the government will receive should convince them that the West supports the present admini-

Futile Attempt at Scandal.

Another attempt to prove a scandal was made in the House last week by Mr. O. S. Crotchet, Conservative, from New Brunswick, over what is known as the "sawdust wharf" at Richibucto, N. B.

His Session's Work.

This is one affair to which Mr. Crochet has devoted most of his attention this session, both in the way of asking questions, calling for papers, and probing it before the Public Accounts Committee. Finally he consumed over four hours in reading extracts from the evidence and commenting upon the same.

This alleged scandal met with the same fate as the one introduced by Mr. Lennox a few days before, with relation to the National Transcontinental. It had no vitality, it died a natural death, it had nothing substantial to sustain it. It has taken its place with the many abortive attempts to discredit the government, which have preceded it. It has passed into oblivion.

Glance at the Facts.

The facts may be summarized thus: The town of Richibucto has a population of 1,000 people. It is the shire town of Kent, N. B. It is the centre of a flourishing lumber and fishing industry. It is served by the Kent Northern Railway, which may sometime become a feeder to the Intercolonial Railway.

The government had already purchased what is known as the municipal wharf, upon which the tracks of the railway were laid, but the wharf was not large enough to afford the necessary accommodation. One of the railway owners was Mr. T. O. Murray, who requiring further wharfage facilities, purchased what was known as "sawdust wharf" from one O'Leary for $700.

Size of Property.

This wharf covers nearly 10 acres of ground, and has a frontage of 725 feet by 730 feet along the main street on the river front.

Mr. O'Leary had offered to sell to the government a portion of the wharf, 227 feet by 100 feet for $500, which would be $10,000 for the whole property.

subject of these boundaries, but could not agree upon terms. They returned, however and made an astounding report of the conference—among other things saying that Sir Wilfrid Laurier had offered the sum of $10,000 as being sufficient to administer the extra territory.

Premier Denies It.

To this statement Sir Wilfrid gave an unqualified denial, and said that he should be credited with ordinary common sense in a matter of this kind, even by his political opponents.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier's resolution in 1908 proposed to add 180,000 square miles to Manitoba's boundaries, bringing Manitoba up to 253,000 square miles. He proposed also to add about 140,000 square miles to the present area of Ontario.

Fighting With Ontario.

The Conservatives have created another difficulty for themselves. They are criticizing the terms upon which they entered confederation, terms which were arranged by Sir John A. Macdonald. They are also ambitious to get a slice of the present western portion of Ontario.

The Ontario Conservative members face a curious situation also. They must either oppose their friends from Manitoba in their contention, or they must be in the position of agreeing to surrender to Manitoba a big slice cut from the western boundary of Ontario.

Party in Another Muddle.

This is only another example of the muddle in which the Conservative party finds itself upon every question, where an attempt is made to oppose the action of the Liberal government. Sir Wilfrid expressed himself as willing to renew negotiations with the

THE REPORT OF 1907-1908, THIS IS AN increase of no less than $117,506,238 over the figures for the previous year, or over twenty per cent.

Touches Top Notch.

It is more than $26,000,000 over the highest previous figures of 1907-8. At the present time the monthly increases of trade amount to $10,000,000 a month over the corresponding period last year.

The total imports for the year were $375,783,663 an increase of $77,659,868 over 1908-9. Export of domestic products totalled $279,211,527, an increase of $36,607,951 for the same period.

Chief Items of Export.

Exports of foreign products totalled $22,146,992, an increase of $3,238,419. The chief items of export for the year, with comparative figures are as follows:

	1908-09	1909-10
Agriculture ..	$71,997,209	$90,433,747
Forest	39,667,387	47,517,033
Animals and
their produce	51,349,646	53,926,515
Mines	37,257,699	40,087,017
Manufactures	28,957,050	31,494,916
Fisheries	13,819,664	15,627,140

The total duty collected for the year amounted to $61,010,489, an increase of $12,969,475.

The total trade for the month of March last was $66,564,208, an increase of $12,969,475 over last year.

Imports for March were $43,391,991 an increase of about $10,000,000 over the same month last year.

Exports of domestic products for March totalled $22,199,275, as compared with $18,397,974 in March of last year.

Unprecedented Prosperity.

This unprecedented prosperity under the Laurier administration is the best evidence possible that the people do not desire or require any change in government. Everything points to the current year's total trade reaching the eight hundred million dollar mark, and the total revenue will not be far short of $110,000,000.

It took the Conservative government eighteen years to increase the total trade of $66,000,000. Compare this with last year's increase of $117,000,000. In other words under the present government total trade increased nearly double in one year, over amount of increase secured by the Conservatives in eighteen years.

To Limit Combines.

Hon. W. L. MacKenzie King, minister of labor, has put through his bill dealing with combines, trusts and mergers. It provides for prompt investigation without expense, to the victims of combines, limiting production or supply. Any six persons may put the law in motion by applying to a judge of the High Court, declaring their belief in the existence of an injurious combine, and asking for an investigation. If the judge decides a case has been made out he will order an investigation. No one personally interested can be appointed to a board of investigation. Trade unions are exempted from the operations of the act.

Protects the People.

The Act has a very general application because it protects both the producer and the consumer. It protects the consumers against enhanced prices, and protects the producer from the lowering of prices by the operation of a combine. It will be well received by the people.

They Want Sir Wilfrid.

From the Pacific coast comes the information that the contemplated tour of Sir Wilfrid Laurier through the West is being received with the greatest delight. It is hoped that Sir Wilfrid will be accompanied by Mr. Fielding and Mr. Graham.

There are so many new men in the West the past few years who know the very best political move that could be made, is the proposed western tour of the Premier and his colleagues.

It is to be hoped that nothing will occur to prevent such a tour, and the welcome members of the government will receive should convince them that the West supports the present administration.

Her Great Question.

This desire to uplift the sisterhood has many drawbacks and discouragements. Mrs. Lysander John Appleton recently conducted such a meeting. She spoke of the blind groping of her sisters for higher ideals and the troubled questions that obtruded themselves upon their subconsciousness all through the day and night. "I would like to hear from you," she said. "Perhaps in your yearning for a solution of the problems that confront you I may be able to help you. Mrs. Boogs, tell me what is the great question of your life." Mrs. Boogs rose, pale and trembling. "It is this," she said. "What shall I get for the next meal?"

Too Much.

MINISTER WHO TESTED ZAM-BUK.

Read His Deliberate Opinion!

Rev. P. F. Laugill, "The Manse" Carp, Ont., writes: "Some considerable time ago I began using Zam-Buk with a view to testing it thoroughly. I am troubled with eczema, which is always worse in the early part of winter, and seems to leave me about spring. I tried Zam-Buk immediately my hands started to break out, and am pleased to say that it checked the disease, which is more than I can say for anything I have ever before tried. We now have Zam-Buk in the house continuously. The children use it for scratches, cuts, and any skin injury or disease, and I carry a small sample box in my pocket. One evening I happened to look in where an old man had met with an accident a week before, and had lost a finger nail. His wife was dressing the wound. I dressed it with Zam-Buk and left the little sample box with them for the next dressing. I have seen the old gentleman since, and he has now the same high opinion of Zam-Buk as myself and my family have."

"On another occasion a farmer called at 'The Manse,' and I noticed a rag on his finger. Enquiring about the injury, I learned that he had somehow taken a piece of flesh off, and the wound had started to fester. He was afraid it would turn to blood-poisoning. I gave him about a third of a box of Zam-Buk and he applied it. A few days later I saw him, and he said 'That's great salve of yours; my finger is now doing fine.'

This is a Scoteman's opinion; it has taken a good while to convince him but he wanted to make sure of Zam-Buk's merit before endorsing it. "It is well worth recommending."

This is exactly the kind of testimony we most appreciate. Test Zam-Buk! Don't go by hearsay! You will find it gives the best results in all cases of eczema, ringworm, festering sores, piles, cuts, burns, face sores, eruptions, and all skin injuries and diseases. All druggists and stores, 50c box, or from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price, but refuse cheap and harmful substitutes and imitations.

As the young man entered the old

"No," replied the young man calmly.
"I've come to tell you that she loves

"What?" roared the old man.

"She says so herself," persisted the

A FEAT OF CONJURING.

The Popular Coffee Trick and How It Is Performed.

METHODS OF THE MAGICIAN.

Changing White Paper Into Milk, Blue
Paper Into Mocha and Bran Into Cut Sugar Is Comparatively Easy When You Have Been Shewn the Way.

A trick always popular with the professional conjurer is that known as the "coffee trick," though some high-falutin title, as, for instance, "Marabout Mocha," is better for a program. It has the advantage, too, of not conveying any idea of what the trick is to be. The trick is as suitable for the drawing room as for the stage, and an amateur with a little practice may do it easily. Remember, with a little practice, for, like everything in conjuring, not only a little but sometimes a great deal of practice is necessary if the performer desires to do his tricks with ease and skill and so as to bewilder his audience.

When about to present this trick the performer has on a table three wooden boxes, a large goblet shaped glass jar and two German silver "shakers" or cups, such as are used in mixing lemon-juice, ice, etc., for a glass of lemonade.
In one of the boxes is a quantity of bran, in another some pieces of chopped up white paper and in the third a similar lot of blue paper. These, with two pieces of black velvet, each about nine inches square, and a paper cylinder, are all that appear to be used in the trick. Picking up one shaker, the performer fills it with white paper and immediately pours it back into the box. Again he dips the shaker into the box and, with a shoveling motion, fills it and stands it on a table so that every one may see it. The other shaker he fills in the same way, but with the blue paper. Finally the glass jar is filled with bran and stood on a table by itself.
Over one shaker is spread one of the velvet squares and on top of it is placed a small, round metal plate. The other shaker is covered with the second velvet square, but without any metal plate.

"Remember," says the performer,
"this cup is filled with white paper and that one with blue," and, pulling the velvet piece of one cup, he pours from it into a small pitcher about a pint of milk—"The milk of human kindness as extracted from the daily press." Removing the metal plate and the velvet from the second cup, he pours from it into the first cup—"steaming Mocha coffee; no grounds for complaint." Picking up the paper cylinder, he drops it over the upper part of the glass jar, and, lifting it up almost immediately, it is found that the bran is gone and the jar is filled with lump sugar.

It is a showy trick which is generally followed by applause, that sweetest of music to a performer. Here is the explanation:

In each box of paper is a duplicate shaker, one filled with milk, the other with coffee. Fitted into the mouth of each shaker is a shallow metal saucer, the edges flaring out so as to rest on the mouth of the cup. At one point on the edge of each saucer is soldered a semicircle of stiff wire about the size of a dime, so that the performer may easily grasp it. On each saucer is glued some bits of the paper with which the shaker is supposed to be filled. These shakers stand upright in the box in such position that the wire

CURED OF CONSTIPATION

Mr. Andrews praises Dr.
Morse's Indian Root Pills.

Mr. George Andrews of Halifax, N. S., writes:

"For many years I have been troubled with chronic Constipation. This ailment never comes single-handed, and I have been a victim to the many illnesses that constipation brings in its train.
Medicine after medicine I have taken in order to find relief, but one and all left me in the same hopeless condition. It seemed that nothing would expel from me the one ailment that caused so much trouble, yet at last I read about these Indian Root Pills.

That was indeed a lucky day for me,
for I was so impressed with the statements made that I determined to give them a fair trial.

They have regulated my stomach and bowels. I am cured of constipation, and I claim they have no equal as a medicine."

For over half a century Dr. Morse's stipation and clogged, inactive kidneys, them. They cleanse the whole system in the jar is used. The larger end, which is the top, is closed while the bottom is open. From the top is a fine stiff wire passing from one side to the other. It describes a small bow that serves as a handle to lift out the shape. Bran is glued over the outside of the shape, and some loose bran is spread over the top. The shape is filled with lump sugar, placed inside a second jar and stood inside the box of bran. When the first jar is put into the box, ostensibly to be filled, the performer exchanges it for the second.

This he takes out and shows it apparently filled with bran. It is covered with the paper cylinder, which goes on loosely, and in removing this the performer slips one finger under the wire handle, lifts out the shape, and the sugar falls into the jar. As the shape is taken out the performer's hand passes carelessly over the box of bran, into which the shape is dropped.
At almost the same moment the paper is crumpled up and tossed into the audience. The trick is so neatly done and is with so simple that he must be a bungler, indeed, who cannot deceive even a clever audience.

The coffee may be served to the audience.—St. Nicholas.

The Height of Waves.

Measurements and estimates from mariners and observers at sea indicate that the average height of all the waves running in a gale in the open ocean is about twenty feet, but the height of the individual waves is often found to vary in the proportion of one to two, and there is, in fact, in a fairly regular sea a not inconsiderable range of size among the waves. In any statement as to the size of waves in a gale on the ocean one should not neglect the mention of the larger waves that occur at fairly frequent intervals. These, which may be termed the ordinary maximum waves, are perhaps what seamen really refer to when they state the size of the waves met with during a storm at sea.
"About forty feet" is a common estimate of the height of the larger waves in a severe gale on the North Atlantic.

All Pain

"In my family Dr. Miles' ply me with what I want, are you?"

"Hardly."

"Then what a foolish proposition it would be for me to come to you and say, 'Mr. Parkerson, I have been very favorably impressed with your house and furniture,' or 'I think I'd like your daughter' or anything else in that line. But when your daughter wants anything it's different. Now, isn't it different?"

"It certainly is different," admitted the old man cautiously.

"Precisely," said the young man. "She and I figured that all out very carefully last night. You see, I have no particular prospects, and we could both see that there wasn't one chance in a hundred that you would give her to me. Then she suggested that you had never yet refused anything that she wanted, no matter what the cost might be, and that perhaps it would be a good plan to change the usual order somewhat. We sort of felt that it wouldn't be right to ask you to do anything for me, but it's different in her case, as I remarked before. So I'm here merely as her agent to say that she wants me and that she wants me very much and to ask you to please see that she gets me. She never has wanted anything so much as she wants me, and I am so favorably disposed toward her that if you care to make the investment I shall be quite willing to leave the terms entirely to you and her."

Naturally she got him. No wide awake business man is going to overlook a chance to get such a fine sample of nerve in the family.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

A Bargain.

"I have something for you here, my love," said Mr. Darley as he proceeded to open a large, round box.

"What is it, precious?"

"Wait and see."

Darley carefully unwrapped the article and disclosed a lady's hat.

"Isn't it a beauty?" he asked. "I bought it myself as a surprise to you. Don't you think it is a perfect dream?"

Mrs. Darley gazed at the hat and burst into tears.

"I can't wear it!" she cried. "It doesn't suit me at all. You meant to please me, I know, but it isn't my style at all."

"Don't cry, dear. The milliner said you could exchange it, and if you'll agree not to buy any ties for me hereafter I'll let you select your own hats and bonnets."

An agreement was concluded on that basis.

The Jury System.

The jury as it is found to-day is a relic of the ancient popular justice. In the city states of antiquity the entire male population passed upon the guilt or innocence of the offending party. The oldest Greek poet has left us a picture of what the primitive jury was. The court is sitting; the question of "Guilty" or "Not guilty" is put, and the old men of the community in turn give their opinion, the rank and file of the people standing about applauding the opinion that strikes them most, the applause determining the decision. Gradually the jury became narrowed down in numbers until it finally appears as we see it to-day.

of a dime, so that the performer may easily grasp it. On each saucer is glued some bits of the paper with which the shaker is supposed to be filled. These shakers stand upright in the box in such position that the wire piece of the saucer will be toward the performer when he is ready to remove the velvet cover. As he shoves the paper into the shaker he leaves that one in the box, grasps the other filled with milk or coffee and brings it out, some of the loose bits of paper clinging round the top. These he brushes off endlessly and in doing so, when necessary, adjusts the shaker so that the wire finger piece will be in the proper position. In covering the shakers the performer takes hold of the velvet covers so that the thumb and the third and fourth fingers are under the cover, and with these he catches hold of the projecting finger piece, lifts up the saucers and draws them off, dropping them instantly into a padded box or bag fastened at the back of the table.

As a glass jar is transparent, it follows that a mere saucer of bran in its mouth would not do, so resort is had to another device. A hollow shape of tin, slightly tapering, that fits loosely Hennequin's Infant Tablets.

Save Babies' Lives. For Babies and Small Children. (Made in France.)

Dr. Hennequin's Infant Tablets saved our little girl's life. Three doctors said she could not live. The Tablets cured her.—Mr. E. R. McBride, Napanee, Ont.

My baby was so weak from sickness that he could hardly walk. We thought he would die. We could find nothing to help him. I was given a sample package of these Hennequin Tablets; we used them; I saw a change at once. We secured the Tablets and our baby improved every day, and now is a bright, fat, good natured boy; you could not believe he was the same child. They certainly cured my baby and saved his life. I believe them to be the best medicine ever sold for babies. Mothers if your babies are not well take my advice and try these Tablets.—Mrs. JAMES RIDDELL, Barrydale, Ont.

We have hundreds of such letters. If the Tablets were not what you need we would not offer to give them away and prepay them. If your baby is not well send for trial package.

Hennequin Tablets have the letter "H" stamped upon them—this is your guarantee.

THE LAST RESORT

When all else failed, the Doctors said, "try Fruit-a-tives"

And "Fruit-a-tives" cured Mrs. Cadieux

PLANTAGENET, ONT., JANUARY 31st, 1910.

"About March 1st 1900, I was taken deathly sick with Stomach Trouble, was confined to bed for eight weeks, and was unable to eat or keep anything on my stomach, vomiting nearly all the time. I expected to die, and took many remedies as well as employing different physicians. The doctors said they could do nothing for me and, as a last resort, one of the doctors told me 'to try Fruit-a-tives'—they would not cure me, nothing would."

MRS LAURENT CADIEUX

The blood that the stomach obtains the fluid which digests food. When the blood is laden with impurities, the dissolving fluid (or Gastric Juice) will be impure. These impurities may come from a congested liver, from Constipation, from weak kidneys, from an inactive skin, or from all four. Naturally, the ordinary "digestive powders" and "pepsin tablets" will not cure the trouble, because they only help to dissolve the food—they do not go to the seat of the trouble. "Fruit-a-tives" is the greatest remedy ever discovered for all forms of Indigestion, Dyspepsia and other Stomach Disorders, because "Fruit-a-tives" is unequalled as a blood-purifying medicine. "Fruit-a-tives" acts directly on the liver, regulates the bowels, strengthens the kidneys, stimulates the skin, and thus rids the whole system of all impurities. "Fruit-a-tives" will positively cure you of any kind of Indigestion. "Fruit-a-tives" is sold by all dealers at 50c a box, 6 for $2.50 or trial size, 25c. If you are unable to obtain "Fruit-a-tives" conveniently, do not accept substitutes but send to "Fruit-a-tives" Limited, Ottawa and the regular size packages will be mailed you, postpaid, on receipt of price.

Colonel Samuel Sloper Was a Jack of All Trades.

It is necessary that the pioneer be a man of infinite resource, who can do for himself or his neighbors every necessary task. Such a man was Colonel Samuel Sloper, one of the early settlers of Blandford, Mass., whose astonishing versatility is recorded by S. G. Wood in "Taverns and Turnpikes of Blandford."

Colonel Sloper, among other things, kept something of a stable and pastured horses and stock. For the munificent reward of 3 shillings the old veteran in 1788 moved the family of David Knob by means of "team and hoy." Now and then he turned his hand to odd jobs. He carted and laid out John Waldo Wood's flax one season for £7 10s.

He seems to have made shoes and garments for his family and for his neighbors. For Enos Loomis' young son, who was bound out to him, he did on this wise: "Capping your son's shoes, 1-3." "One bottle-green coat trimmed and made for Moses, 7 shillings." He made several shirts and a frock for the Martin Leonard company.

The number of things which this veteran and "dabster" did make an astonishing list. He was surgeon in ordinary to the parish of Blandford and this long before he had accumulated an army experience. Veterinary, too, he was. His journals are peppered over with charges for the treatment of young horses. In the account of Elliphalet Thompson in the year 1772, along with a "frying Pann" and "1 Pr Sizers," is the charge, "To Seting your boys rist, twelve shillings." James Sinnett in 1785 became indebted to "Setting your knee and Dressings" and to "Sundri Dressings," 4 and 3 shillings respectively.

AMAZING NAVAL HOAX

FOUR BOGUS PRINCES TAKEN OVER H.M.S. DREADNOUGHT.

Four Young Englishmen and One Young Woman Dress Up as Blood Relatives of the Late King Menelik and Are Shown Every Courtesy Usually Extended to Visiting Foreigners—Costumes a Work of Art.

Five young men and one young woman, all of them extremely well connected, and all of them well-to-do, have perpetrated a most amazing and somewhat reprehensible practical joke on the Admiralty, the British navy, and H.M.S. Dreadnought in particular.

It is a joke of such colossal proportions, so audacious—Theodore Hook, that master of practical jokes, might himself have been proud of it—that it is a little hard to put it in a nutshell.

Briefly, however, it may be said that on a recent day three of the young men and the girl, fully disguised as Abyssinian princes, travelled down to Portland, and were there received with princely honors on board the flagship. The two other young men played the parts respectively of attaché to the Foreign Office and interpreter.

From start to finish they were forty minutes on board H.M.S. Dreadnought, and from the point of view of the perpetrators of the joke, the escapade was entirely successful. In fact, on the following day, the battleship in question put to sea without one single officer or man on board being aware of the manner in which they had been hoaxed.

That the matter could have remained a secret forever was, of course, impossible, as the practical jokers used certain means of carrying through their jest which caused instant inquiry on the part of the Foreign Office. These inquiries were so pertinent that the majority of the young men sought seclusion, but one of them, bolder than the rest, remained in London to tell the tale.

The adventure had been brewing for some time, but the exact lines upon which the joke was to be worked were not mapped out till about a fortnight previous to its operation. Then the commander-in-chief of the enterprise hid himself to an entirely innocent and unsuspecting costumer of world-wide renown, and requested him to furnish make-up for four Abyssinian princes. Expense appeared to have been of no account, and the ring-leader actually took to the costume books showing exactly what the princes should wear. Of course, they could have been fitted out in rough-and-ready fashion at an instant's notice, but this was not in the least the idea of this latest follower of "Captain Koepenick." He demanded accuracy of detail, and so some days had to be spent in procuring a rigidly correct make-up.

Indeed, so reckless was he as to what the adventure might cost that he one day rushed out of the shop, declaring that mock jewels were of no value, and returned half an hour later with $2,500 worth or so of precious stones purchased from a neighboring jeweller.

The make-up when complete was certainly striking. The three young men and the young woman all had their hair cut short, and were fitted with black woolly mats which completely covered their skulls. They were all provided with short, crisp, curly black beards and the most complete sets of nigger lips. Their faces, arms, and hands were dyed to the proper hue. They wore turbans and flowing robes. Round the neck of each costumed prince was a sion on the journey down from London; the name chosen for the lady was "Prince Mendax."

Still, no one suspected even the mendacious Mendax.

With characteristic hospitality, the officers of the battleship strove their utmost to shower honors and attentions on their guests. There was unfortunately no Abyssinian flag on board, so, as a makeshift, the flag of Zanzibar was hoisted to the mainmast. Unluckily, too, the National Anthem of Abyssinia could not be discovered among the music. Adam Zanzibar was brought to the rescue, and the National Anthem of that state was rendered quite efficiently, considering the short notice the band had received.

The attaché from the Foreign Office was charming, and his explanations were complete. He told what pleasure it would give the "princes" to see over the warship, and informed one of the officers that the "princes" were on a visit to England in order to make arrangements for sending their sons and nephews to school at Eton.

So the "princes" were shown everything—the wireless, the guns, and the torpedoes, and at every fresh sight they murmured in chorus, "Bunga bunga," which, being interpreted, means "Isn't it lovely?" That is to say, three of the "princes" did, but the fourth "prince," being afraid to reveal her naturally treble voice, assumed a cold, and murmured, "Chuch-a-choi, chuch-a-choi," by which she intended to convey her great appreciation of her surroundings.

After the inspection of the ship a grave peril for a few moments confronted the conspirators. They were asked to take tea, but this was not to be thought of, as it would certainly have ended in the "princes'" false tips becoming drenched. "Prince Makalin," apparently overcome by the hospitality which had been shown him, desired to present an officer with the Grand Cross of Abyssinia. The officer regretfully explained that he could not receive the Order. No one apparently stopped to ask whether there were Grand Crosses in Abyssinia.

Then the "princes" left. They were delighted, and the officers were delighted, too. It was altogether a most pleasant afternoon.

A FEW COMPARISONS.

They Ease the Mind of the Man of Moderate Means.

"All things," said the man of moderate means, "impress us by comparison. If a man had lived all his life in a palace, why, then it would have to be a very grand sort of place indeed that would seem anything particularly fine to him, whereas if one had always lived in a shack a very modest house would seem to him luxurious."

"If since autos first came in we had been driving steadily a $10,000 automobile, then obviously it would take quite considerable of a kerosene cart to give us any added joy in that line, while if we had been accustomed constantly to ride in the street cars, why, then the simplest of gasoline gigs might give us great glee. All things go by comparison."

"Take, for instance, smoking. My regular smoke is a stogy that costs $1.45 a hundred, but I buy also for special occasions a special brand of cigar for which I pay $2 a hundred. I buy a fifty box at a time for a dollar. Commonly I smoke the stogies, and I think they're pretty good, at a little less than a cent and a half a smoke, but if I happen to strike a little streak of luck, why, I then blow myself to a couple of those choice smokes out of the other box, in which really I find great pleasure."

"It's all by comparison. Some men would have to pay $10 for a cigar to get any fun out of it. I can get a lot of fun out of a two cent."

"And, speaking of great pleasure, I'm glad I have not exhausted all my

Hear it yourself - the Edison Phonograph

You cannot judge the Edison by hearing other kinds. The Edison is the sound-reproducing machine at its best. It is not a talking machine. It is a Phonograph reproducing every sound faithfully—the song exactly the way the singer sang it; the opera exactly the way the orchestra played it; the two-step exactly the way the band rendered it.

That is the Edison Phonograph as Mr. Edison makes it—the object of his constant daily care.

When he says he wants to see an Edison Phonograph in every home, he means your home. Do you not want one there? Do you not need this amusement maker for your own sake, for your children and for your guests? Hear one today. Hear all the others too and compare. were all provided with short, crisp, curly black beards and the most complete sets of nigger lips. Their faces, arms, and hands were dyed to the proper hue. They wore turbans and flowing robes. Round the neck of each, suspended by a gold chain, was an early Christian cross. Their persons faintly glittered with costly jewels.

But even in this "make-up" the humor of the instigator of the plot struck a dominant note. The Abyssinian princes were all furnished with enormously long-pointed, elastic-sided patent-leather boots. The princes were indeed a glorious sight.

The man who was to pass as the interpreter—supposedly a German—locked his part. The dress of the Foreign Office attache was, of course, an easy matter to furnish.

On the day selected for the raid on Portland all the conspirators were so anxious that their appearances should present no blemish that they arrived at the costumier's at six o'clock in the morning, and were not satisfied with their Abyssinian toilets until after noon had struck.

Then, unfortunately, they allowed their determination and the exuberance of their spirits slightly to outrun their judgment, and the following telegram was despatched to the Commander-in-Chief of the Home Fleet at Portland:

"Prince Makalin and suite will arrive at Weymouth at 4:20. Kindly make all arrangements to receive them."

This telegram, it must regrettably be said, bore the name of a high official whose lightest wishes were likely to be received with respect.

And so it was that the "princely" visitors were received on board the flagship, and the marines presented arms as "Prince Makalin" and his gorgeous suite stepped over the side.

Here it may be mentioned that all the "princes" bore names which had been specially invented for the occasion.

It's all by comparison. Some men would have to pay $10 for a cigar to get any fun out of it. I can get a lot of fun out of a two cent.

"And, speaking of great pleasure, I'm glad I have not exhausted all my great pleasures. I've still got them all, or most all, to enjoy. My capacity for novelty and enjoyment has never been much taxed. It is still practically boundless. I have got life ahead of me, not behind, and when I do get money, as I certainly hope to do some day, why, everything will be new and charming to me, and I shall enjoy everything and all immensely.

"I've got something to look forward to anyway, and I think there's something in that."

Why He Worried.

"Great Scott, old man!" exclaimed his best friend, coming upon him in dejected attitude and with pale and haggard face. "What's up?"

"Up," he responded. "Why, Snooks had a bad fall last night and hurt his head."

"Sorry to hear it, old chap," said the best friend carelessly. "But it won't do him any good for you to worry. And who is Snooks, anyway? Never heard of him in my life before."

"Snooks!" he repeated dolefully. "Well, I don't know him personally very well myself."

"Then why on earth bother?" queried the friend.

"Why, you idiot," roared the dejected one. "Snooks owes me $10, and the doctor says he'll probably lose his memory." —London Answers.

An Afterthought.

Mrs. Blank prided herself on her ability to train her servants, and she had just been bragging about the treasure she had in her new colored cook when the following dialogue occurred:

"Now, Amaranth, I'll come out and fry the chicken, but I want you to have it all ready for me. Dress it carefully and be sure to singe off every hair."

"Yes'm."

"Then cut it up just as I showed you the other day. Do you remember?"

"Yes'm."

"Wash and drain it well. You understand?"

"Yes'm."

"Then, as an afterthought, shall I kill it?"

A Delicate Proposal.

A Scotchman who had survived three wives and who had a fourth in contemplation decided upon a delicate method of proposing to the latest object of his affections. Accordingly he took her to walk one afternoon, and before she realized where their footsteps tended they had arrived at the graveyard where his lost loves lay buried. Standing before the three tombstones, he said:

"There lies Jeannie, there lies Griselle, there lies Maggie, and," he added, pointing to the next vacant space and taking her hand tenderly, "how wad you like to lie there?"

Two Sinners.

"It is very wrong to tell a falsehood," said his mother to little Jimmie, who had caught him in one.

"Then we're both offal sinners, ain't we, maw?" queried Jimmie.

"Both! What do you mean?"

"Why, you told Mrs. Smith yesterday that you hoped she'd call again, an' after she wuz gone you said you wished she'd never come again."

men's output, though, he humorously remarks, it is idle ever to expect the world to realize this. As he put it, "The public are always tolerant towards versatility, and apparently having ticked me off as a poet, so poet I must remain; but I have tried very hard to write prose, and I am always more pleased when I write a successful piece of prose than verse, though poetry comes easier to me." Mr. Dobson's early aspirations were in the direction of art, and he actually went through a course of study at South Kensington.

ORIGIN OF SIGNS.

Our Punctuation and Abbreviations Are Mostly of Ancient Usage.

Every day we use remarkable signs in our writing without being aware that there is anything peculiar about them. Thus, we use various punctuation marks, abbreviations, figures, and what not, without a knowledge of what they really mean. For instance, there is the familiar note of exclamation (!). Why do we use this sign? The reason is that it represents the Latin exclamation "IO," which was used to signify a cry of joy. Therefore, to signify joy, or an exclamation, instead of writing the word, the Roman writers began to put the letter on top of one another. This, being rapidly written, gradually became so slurred that it took the form "!" which we use now.

In a similar way we arrived at that common sign the note of interrogation (?). This stands for the Latin word "Questio." This word was abbreviated, much in the same way as the other word, by putting the initial letter over the final letter, and this gradually took the familiar form of "?". In a similar way at this day we make many abbreviations. For instance, we use "o/c," meaning on account, and the contraction "a/c," which does not mean, as is commonly thought, account, but means account current, that is "running account." In the commercial world the expression "on a/c of" is often used, but is quite incorrect, the abbreviated form of account being "a/c," while the whole expression is so much simpler when represented "o/c."

The familiar contraction of ounce, "oz," is the survival of a very old order of things. Of course, there is no "z" in ounce, and really the "z" is an old-fashioned way of expressing a semi-colon (:). In the early days of hand-writing the semi-colon (:) was generally used as a note of abbreviation, signifying the omission of any final syllable. So the word ounce would be written in a kind of shorthand, as "o::."

Quite similarly was the origin of that curious contraction, "viz," meaning "namely." Very few people could say how we get at that abbreviation, for the Latin word for namely is "videlicet." The reason is that, as in the case of ounce, this was abbreviated to "vi;" then the "z" came in to represent the rapid form of writing the semi-colon, and we use the abbreviation without referring at all to the Latin word. It is really surprising the number of Latin words which we still use, especially in the form of contractions. For instance, we use "etc.," which is a contraction of et cetera, the Latin for "and so forth." This is sometimes represented by the sign "&c.," which brings to view another interesting contraction. The "&" is a sign which is known to printers as the ampersand, a term which is the corruption of the words "and per se and."

Really it is a sacred symbol for the cross, and the Emperor Justinian decreed that this symbol attached to a legal document should have the effect of an oath. We still use the curious expression "Sign your name," instead of saying "Write your name," this being a survival of those days when even cultured men had to make a sign, as they could not write their names.

MILLING IN ONTARIO.

GREAT NATIONAL INDUSTRY IS CENTRING HERE.

The Maple Leaf Company Will Have a Daily Capacity of 12,800 Barrels of Flour When the Port Colborne Mill is added to Present Plans.

The official announcement of the organization of the Maple Leaf Milling Company, Limited, indicates that Ontario is coming into its own in the milling industry. This company, besides having five of its six mills situated within the Province, will have a total daily capacity almost equal to that of any of the other companies operating in Canada. Prominent Toronto interests are identified with the organization of the new company, along with the interests who have been for some years past behind both the Maple Leaf Flour Mills Company, Limited, and the Hedley Shaw Milling Company, Limited.

Among these Toronto interests are Mr. Cawthra Mulock, and Mr. C. W. Bond, and both Mr. D. C. Cameron, the former President of the Maple Leaf Flour Mills Company, Limited, and Mr. Hedley Shaw, who has been General Manager of the Maple Leaf Flour Mills Company, Limited, will retain their active interest in the new concern, the Board of Directors including, in addition to these four gentlemen, Mr. John I. A. Hunt, President of the Goderich Elevator and Transit Company, Limited; Mr. Chas. Wurtele, Vice-President of the National Iron Works, Limited; Mr. John Carrick, Secretary of the Maple Leaf Flour Mills Company, Limited, and Mr. Hedley Shaw, of Toronto, Managing Director of the Maple Leaf Milling Company, Limited. When taking over the Maple Leaf Flour Mills Company, Limited, and the Hedley Shaw Milling Company, Limited, the interests behind the new company have placed in the treasury $1,000,000 of additional cash capital, which, besides permitting the completion of a modern 6,000-barrel mill, a 1,000,000-bushel elevator at Port Colborne and the erection of some fifteen new elevators within the western wheat belt, will provide it with further working capital.

The new company will when the new mill at Port Colborne is completed have a daily capacity of 12,800 barrels of flour. The mills of the company are situated at Kenna, St. Catharines, Thorold, Welland and Port Colborne (the latter in course of construction) and at Brandon, in the Province of Manitoba.

Ontario will have a particular interest in watching the results achieved by the operation of the new big plant at Port Colborne, as experts state that a mill erected at such a point will enable the new company that owns it to lay down its flour at almost every point in Canada or at the Atlantic seaboard in Canada, in Great Britain and in the foreign markets of the world at a much lower rate than can be done by any other concern that has to alternate from any other point in the country.

Up to the present time Montreal has been rather the headquarters of the big milling concerns, but the organization of this company makes it look as though Toronto would rival the older city in still another industry by being the headquarters of the concern, the total output of which will be equal to that of any one concern in the country.

As Others Saw Him.

A rather pompous looking denizen was endeavoring to impress upon the young mind of a class of boys the importance of living a Christian life.

"Why do people call me a Christian, children?" the worthy dignitary asked, standing very erect and smiling down upon them.

A moment's pause, then a shrill little voice was heard to say, "Because they don't know you."

Excellent bricks are made of the soil of ant hills in Central Africa. The natives tread it with water into a doughlike substance, which is shaped in rough wooden molds. It is then dried in the sun and afterward baked in native kilns.

greater than he hath not appeared. At his last defeat for the presidency strong men wept bitter tears. When his star set it was felt to be the signal for the dissolution of the great party of which he was the founder. In words worthy to be recalled, "when the tidings came like wailing over the state, that Harry Percy's spur was cold the chivalrous felt somehow the world had grown commonplace."

The following incident along the line indicated may be considered characteristic. While Mr. Clay was a senator a resolution, in accordance with a some time custom, was introduced into the Kentucky house of representatives instructing the senators from that state to vote in favor of a certain bill then pending in congress. The resolution was in the act of passing without opposition when a hitherto silent member from one of the mountain counties, springing to his feet, exclaimed, "My Speaker, am I to understand that this legislature is undertaking to tell Henry Clay how to vote?" The speaker answered that such was the purport of the resolution. At which the member from the mountains, throwing up his arms, exclaimed, "Great heaven!" and sank into his seat. It is needless to add that the resolution was immediately rejected by unanimous vote.

Useless Purchases.

Two eminent French gentlemen, who were great friends, used to relate an amusing story of their impudent days. Neither fame nor fortune had come to them, but they were always hopeful. The years had weighed heavily enough upon Jules, however, for him to have become entirely bald. One day Alphonse met him with a beaming countenance and cried gayly, "What do you think, Jules? I have been buying a strong box?" "Then Alphonse," replied Jules firmly, "I shall buy a hairbrush!"

or rescue, during a noisy gale, or pick up a man who had fallen from another ship. On this occasion the Duke of Edinburgh, in a general signal, thanked him for his service.

The Sentry's Error.

An officer tells this good story: "A French sentinel in Algeria had for colonel a very tall, lanky, round-shouldered man.

"The round-shouldered colonel one night was making a quiet inspection. Passing the sentinel, he found, to his rage and indignation, that he was not challenged. So he returned to the man and roared,

"You didn't challenge me!"

"No, sir," faltered the sentinel, saluting.

"Well, why didn't you?" the colonel demanded.

"Excuse me, sir," said the sentinel, "but I thought I beg your pardon, sir, I thought you was a camel!"

THREATENED WITH PARALYSIS

Peter E. Summers relates his experience:

"I was troubled with Nervous Debility for many years. I lay it to indiscretions and excesses in youth. I became very despondent and didn't care whether I worked or not. I imagined everybody who looked at me guessed my secret. Imaginative dreams at night plagued me—my back ached, had pains in the back of my head, hands and feet were cold, the skin burning, poor appetite, fingers were shaky, eyes dim, hair loss, memory poor, etc. Numbness in the fingers set in and the doctor told me he feared paralysis. I took all kinds of medicines and tried many first-class physicians, wore an electric belt for three months, but received little benefit. I was induced to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kennedy, though I had lost all faith in doctors. Like a drowning man I commenced the NEW METHOD TREATMENT and it saved my life. The improvement was like magic—I could feel the vigor going through the nerves. I was cured mentally and physically. I have sent them many patients and continue to do so."

NOTES AND COMMENTS

The advice to think, read, form ideas before indulging in free and unlimited conversation is good for men as well as women. The lady who boldly accused many representatives of her sex of imagining that inconsequential small talk serves every purpose should be invited to mature before young men. Carlyle's eloquent tribute to silence was amusing in view of his own garrulity and verbosity, but there is a golden mean lies through study of and extreme economy of speech, on the one hand, and perpetual chatter on the other. The way to that golden mean between taciturnity good books and attention to things that matter, to serious and interesting questions of the time—artistic, social, literary, political.

Fortunately, women and girls today are not open to wholesale indictments for inane gossip and trivial talk. The tendency is distinctly toward reading and thinking. There is marked interest in classical fiction, the drama, poetry even, and in the modern short story. Still, the empty-headed chatters have not disappeared from the face of the earth, and the gospel of reading and thinking is by no means superfluous. It may be said, roughly, that to make men and women read and think, to cause one word to be uttered where five were uttered before, is to confer a great benefit on humanity.

Recognizing the fact that the brain depends upon the stomach and that the latter in turn depends upon the teeth, a wealthy man in Boston has provided a fund of $2,000,000, the income of which is to be expended in the care of children's teeth. Any school child up to the age of 16 may have its teeth cared for free of charge. Commissions reporting on the health of school children have decided time and again that one of the chief contributing causes of deficiency and ill-health among pupils has been poor or uncared for teeth. Not only do they affect the pupil's health but his capacity for study. This is a practical charity which is greatly to be commended, and it were well if it could be duplicated in every large city in the land.

Why should it be thought banal to talk about the weather? This is one of our social fallacies. In an intelligent and serious minded society it ought to rank as a topic immediately after the foibles of our friends and the failures of our foes. Gossip, of course, is the vital fluid of social intercourse, without which we should soon return to the monosyllable and the cave. But the weather need yield place to nothing else. As a subject of grave

THE SPIRIT OF WORSHIP

The Finest Gift of Worship Is an Endeavor to Be That Which We See Before Us

"O Lord, my God, thou art very great; thou art clothed with glory and honor,"—Ps. civ., 1.

Irreverence is the surest evidence of blind selfishness. Only the conceited egotist can be quite devoid of the spirit of worship. Could any condition be much more sad than that of the man who has come to the place where there is nothing beyond himself, nothing to aspire after, no heights to be attained or ideals to be realized?

The growing life must worship. But worship must be that which makes for growth, not supine abnegation, not servile crawling before some awesome power. Cowardly fear of things sublime and divine makes worship quite impossible. But to turn with love and longing toward that which we see as a far off and desirable glory and beauty, this is worship.

The trouble with those in whom the spirit of worship is dead is that they never have learned to lift up their eyes at all; they have acquired the fatal habit of the inlooking eye, the vision that turns toward the self only. Shutting out all other objects, making comparisons impossible, they have become absorbed in self-satisfaction, self-worship, and so have come to believe there is really nothing worshipful besides.

In order that our lives may reach out to more, in order that we may move on, may develop, may enrich our very selves, we need constantly the sense of that which lies beyond.

THE PRESENT POWERS, the vision and hope of that which we cannot yet comprehend. If we would make any worthy progress we must all travel in that light which has eluded all scientific analyses.

Worship is just this sense of greatness beyond myself, of ideals unrealized, of hopes that move us too deeply for words because they waken a sense of a self we have not yet come to know. This is the feeling that comes over one in the sight of sublime works of art, where the worker has brought some of the further glory into his work. This is that which fills us in the presence of the mountains and in the heart of the woods.

Worship is faith looking forward, the heart conscious of that which the reason may fail to describe precisely; it is the confidence that comes over us in all exalted moments and sustains us in every hour that life means more than a dull level, that it is an ascent, that its fulness of meaning is not yet known to us. The life of worship takes life in terms of possibilities too high for immediate realization. A man worships his God in this way as that which stands to him for all that is highest and most desirable. He reaches after that divine fact by faith. He is confident the vision that glows in his own breast has reality somehow, somewhere, and that it is set before his eyes for his cheer and inspiration.

Fear casts out worship. We shrink from the things we fear, or we fight them in order that they may cease to be. Love is the secret of worship; we seek the things we love. In the lives of those we love are the ideal elements we faintly find in our own. The love that casts out fear brings in worship.

A life without aught to worship is worse off than a sunless world devoid of greatness and goodness lying beyond its comprehension. Yet many will suppose that the one way to live

THE LIGHT AND HAPPY LIFE is to shut out the thought of the greater life and to get as far as possible from the thought of a God of goodness, light, and cheer.

Where there is nothing to reach out for, nothing to admire, reverence, and love, no life larger than our own, nothing that speaks to us of glory yet to be revealed, there the life shrinks into itself, hope and spontaneity die down, and living becomes a weary task with its last mystery explored and its last secret known. The soul of man, eyesights for new worlds of the spirit.

Worship is not the tribute paid in fear; it is simply the free outgoing of ourselves toward the larger life, the mystery that envelopes us all. It is our hope of larger life, our sense of unrealized possibilities, our confidence that the last page has not yet been turned and that we with our weaknesses and needs are not the final word of creation.

They best worship the highest who bring not offerings to appease wrath or purchase favor, but the yearning heart, the teachable spirit, the honest endeavor to reach the glory that lies before, to make real and present all the noble and ideal elements in that which is worshipped.

Every man needs to cultivate this ability to see a life larger than his own and faith to believe in levels higher than his present, to believe in noble possibilities in his fellows and high destiny for the race, to feel we are but at the very alphabet of all our learnings, at the very dawn of our day, and to gather to himself all that will enable him to realize its glowing fullness.

THE GIRL FROM BROWNLOW'S

Brownlow, managing director of the emporium that bore his name, laid aside one letter from the morning's correspondence as deserving of his personal attention, and when the manager appeared he indicated the batch with a jerk of the head.

"You can attend to all that lot yourself, Morton," he said. "There is nothing important excepting this."

He re-read the letter before communicating its contents to the manager.

"Crewson, junior partner of Crewson & Crewson—you know the firm—is returning from abroad after a three-years' business tour, and asks us to furnish the Hollies, at Nutford—regardless! The thing has to be done in a month's time, and everything must be in readiness for habitation. Bringing a wife home with him, I expect.

"The order in itself is a good one," he continued; "but if we can please him, it is bound to be a good advertisement. There is certain to be a reception, and the fact that we have accomplished everything without supervision in so short a time is almost certain to be mentioned. Now, who do you suggest shall have charge and see the thing through?"

The manager considered thoughtfully.

"There is Miss Gordon," he said hesitatingly. "She's mixed amongst the class, and ought to know what's required."

"Gordon?" queried the director.

"Yes. You remember Gordon, the merchant? He failed about two years ago, and caused a sensation by putting an end to his life with a bullet."

"Oh, yes, certainly! And how long has she been with the firm?"

"Nearly two years. She has taken on several commissions of this sort—but, of course, not so large—and has given every satisfaction. Perhaps you would like to see her?"

"Right! Show her up!"

Brownlow scrutinized the girl as she nervously entered the private office, and grunted his approval. There was an air of refinement about her.

"We have an important matter here, Miss Gordon," he commenced, "and as I hear good reports of your abilities, I feel disposed to trust you with the execution of it. We are to furnish the Hollies, at Nutford, throughout, and also supply everything wanted, down to the necessary brushes and cleaning utensils required by the one servant they intend keeping. Are you willing to undertake the responsibility?"

She nodded, and Brownlow proceeded.

"Very good. Our client is abroad at present, and as he is bringing home a wife, he naturally wants to have a home in readiness. Therefore there must be no question of delay. 'Oh! And one more point, Miss Gordon. There must be nothing showy or gaudy. I know our client's family, and if there is a comfortable, artistically-furnished home

Gossip, of course, is the vital fluid of social intercourse, without which we should soon return to the monosyllable and the cave. But the weather need yield place to nothing else. As a subject of grave discourse, what concerns us more nearly? Commerce, industry, and finance must watch the weather and yield to its inexorable decrees. Parties and policies may be made or unmade by it, and there is some reason for believing that national racial character is molded by its strong hand. The tonic alternations of our climate may be the secret of the race's virtues and vices. The quality of our ozone doubtless conditions our civilization.

As for the weather in our individual lives, what does not depend upon it? The vital tide ebbs and flows with its changes, and the greatest of all human issues, the issue of life or death, may await the arbitrament of the thermometer. As for the sensitive plate of the spirit, the weather imprints upon it an endless series of moods. Men have taken their own lives because of the weather, have painted great pictures and written great symphonies because of the weather, have loved and wedded, have loved and forgot because of the weather, have made numberless decisions vital to their fate with weather an unrealized factor in the choice. As a matter of fact, we do talk about the weather. We cannot escape it conversationally any more than any other way. It may be on the social index, but it does not belong there.

Halley's comet will not enjoy so latory glory. At least two other comets are due to cross the path of the earth this year. The first is known as Tempel's second periodic comet, discovered in 1873, July 3, at Milan. Its period is about five and one half years, and it was reobserved in 1878, 1891, 1899, and 1907, making its perihelion passage on the last occasion, in November. It should, therefore, return this spring. D'Arrest's comet, discovered in 1851, is the second comet, and is due to return during the summer of this year. Its period is about sixty-one to sixty-two years, and it was reobserved at its return in 1857, 1870, 1877, 1890, and 1897. But it escaped observation, being unfavorably placed, in 1903.

NOT THAT KIND OF A BOY.

"What is Johnny doing in the pantry?" asked his humorous uncle. "Eating jam!"

"No," said Johnny for himself; "I'm no such boy as you read about in your funny papers. I'm putting pennies in my little bank. Got any?"

Don't use what you see if you are unable to see the use.

Lesson VI. Temperance Lesson. Prov. 23. 29-35. Golden Text. Prov. 23. 32.

Verse 29. Woe—A way of translating the Hebrew exclamation, "Oh!"

Sorrow—A way of translating the Hebrew exclamation, "Alas!" A paraphrase of these two questions would be, "Who are the people that must cry aloud, Oh! and Alas!" They are outcries of bitterness of spirit, pain, and remorse. So long as men indulge in silly contentions over the winecup, and, in their angry wranglings, inflict wounds without cause, there will be these sad outcries of distress.

30 Mixed wine—Wine to which spices have been added to make it hotter and to enrich its flavor. This is the drink which Isaiah says (5. 22) unbalances the mind.

31 Three qualities of wine which enhance its peculiar charm—the richness of its color, its liveliness, and its delicate flavor. In the Old Testament there are nine names for wine, but they are all practically the same, and stand for a beverage which, if drunk to excess, will result in intoxication.

32 However smoothly the wine may go down, there is at last a sting and a bite left, which reminds us of mankind's old foe, the serpent. The particular species of adder and serpent cannot be determined from the Hebrew words used.

33 The effect of wine upon the imagination, distorting natural objects into fantastic shapes, and destroying regard for the truth. Among the physical and mental effects of intoxicants mentioned in the Old Testament are dizziness, stupidity, vomiting, incoherent speech, abnormal exuberance of spirits, loss of judgment, contentiousness, shamelessness. All this agrees well with the scientific fact that drink is at the bottom of a vast amount of insanity, disease, and crime, as well as pauperism and racial degeneration. One difference between the drink problem of the olden time and now is that then it was confined almost entirely to the wealthier classes, owing to the great cost of intoxicating liquors. Nowadays it is easy for the poorest to procure enough to dethrone the reason. In a recent discussion in England it was said that when wealthy people feel run down, they take a trip to the South of France. Sixpennyworth of gin is a working man's mistaken way of going to the South of France."

I will seek it again—An insatiable thirst for more is one of the commonest marks of the confirmed carouser.

HEALTH

BRONCHITIS.

Bronchitis is the name given to any inflammation of the bronchial tubes. In a fairly healthy adult an attack of acute bronchitis is not a very terrifying thing, although it is most distressing and disagreeable.

It is as if an unusually severe cold and cough, instead of confining itself to the head and throat, wandered down the chest. The irritation of the tubes results in a constant cough and sense of breathlessness. The temperature rises, the patient feels sick, the more so that the incessant coughing does not result in the throwing off of any secretion to speak of.

In a day or two the inflammation in the tubes subsides, the temperature goes down, there is less and less sense of oppression, and the secretion gradually becomes freer. From this point there is gradual recovery, as from an ordinary bad cold.

On the other hand, in the very old or the very young, or with those whose powers of resistance are lessened from any cause whatever, bronchitis is a dangerous disease. It has a tendency to run from the acute into the chronic form, in which the sufferer may be perfectly well during the summer months, or while in a warm climate, but at the least chill or exposure must expect and will get his inevitable attack of bronchitis with symptoms persisting until the return of warm weather.

The moral of this is that it is most essential to give proper treatment during the acute stage. The need of watchful care during a bronchial attack will be the more appreciated when it is understood that such an attack may be the beginning sign and warning of a tuberculous trouble; and furthermore that whooping-cough and measles sometimes begin that way.

In any case, whether the attack be simple bronchitis or a warning of some other trouble, the first rule should be, "straight to bed." In fact, this good old-fashioned rule at the onset of any type of so-called "cold" cannot be bettered.

A wise secondary rule is to stay in bed till the temperature has been normal for a day or two. If this were observed, relapses would be fewer and convalescences shortened.

Never mind how mild the trouble promises to be, a physician should be at once summoned, not only because he only is competent to recognize danger-signals, but also because there are many alleviations in his power of the numerous painful and distressing symptoms of this disorder.—Youth's Companion.

AND THE WAR WAS ON.

Mrs. X. (quarreling)—"And what would you be now if it hadn't been for my money?"

Mr. X. (calmly)—"A bachelor, my dear."

The Young Doctor—"Just think; six of my patients recovered this week." The Old Doctor—"It's your own fault, my boy. You spend too much time at the club."

there must be no question of delay. "OK! And one more point, Miss Gordon. There must be nothing showy or gaudy. I know our client's family, and if there is a comfortable, artistically-furnished home in Lancashire, it is the Oaks."

"The Oaks!" The girl let the words slip out with a little gasp. "Yes; the Crewsons," he replied. And suddenly remembering the girl's former position in life, he added, more kindly. "Did you know them?"

"Yes." Her eyes filled.

"Never mind the past," continued Brownlow, with a touch of sympathy that surprised him. "See this thing through all right, and we'll look after you in the future."

She thanked him in a broken voice, and staggered through the doorway. But during the rest of the day she went about her work with a hopeless, weary expression.

When at last she reached the little combined room she rented, she flung her hat aside. On the mantelpiece was a photograph—a photograph of a young man, whose smiling, handsome face had cheered her through long months of bitter struggles. But now the smile was a smile of mockery. With a sacred, white face she gazed long and steadily at it, and presently sobs convulsed her.

"It's not just because he promised," she sobbed. "That's all over now. But to be forced to prepare the home for him and her—it's too hard!"

She declined to refuse, to throw up the situation; but as the first effects of the blow passed away she forced herself to look at the situation more calmly.

The awful struggle she had undergone before getting work came back with a vividness that made her tremble. No, she must retain her situation at any cost.

She took the photograph from its frame, and laid it amongst the few other relics of better days.

The next three weeks passed in a whirl. Painters, decorators, and cleaners followed in rapid succession, and the furniture vans were ever at the door.

Brownlow, for once, found himself contradicted, and his suggestions politely, but none the less decidedly, refused. Miss Gordon objected to be guided. She was working out a scheme of her own, and when he saw it developing, Brownlow discreetly retired, satisfied that his new assistant was proving herself a treasure.

Before the stipulated time all was in readiness, and she would have returned to the shop. But Brownlow refused the necessary permission, and though she was terrified at meeting her old lover, in the circumstances she was forced to remain.

There was little to do but dusting, and the time dragged heavily. She roamed about the rooms, giving a touch here, and making a little alteration there, to improve the effect, and finally expressed herself perfectly satisfied. It was a home—such a home as she had once dreamt of possessing herself. Mentally, she pictured Crewson in the snug armchair on one side of the fireplace, and wondered what sort of a girl would fill the companion chair opposite.

One morning the bell rang. Crewson was due, and intuitively she guessed he had arrived. She started forward to obey the summons, and stopped, clutching the table for support. The bell rang again, and the little maid-of-all-work seized the opportunity of showing herself at the door.

Crewson entered with Brownlow, and made a tour of the principal rooms.

"The kitchen next," said Brownlow.

"No," came the reply, "it doesn't matter. That part of the house concerns her. I know nothing of its arrangements."

He spoke dejectedly, bitterly, she thought, and wondered at the cause. They returned to the drawing-room, and Miss Gordon crept out of the pantry.

"Yes, I am very pleased with the house—very," she heard him say. "Everything has been done beautifully, and reflects great credit upon the person you put in to superintend matters. Only, unfortunately it will have to remain unoccupied for a little time."

"Indeed?" Brownlow's voice expressed his surprise.

"Yes. You see, things haven't turned out quite as I expected, and if you could arrange for one of your people to act as caretaker for a few weeks, it would relieve me immensely."

"And"—he approached the door—"you might instruct her to arrange the few things—photographs and ornaments I have picked up—as she thinks best. They will arrive in the course of a day or so."

The next moment he had gone, and she sat down with mingled feelings of pride—proud satisfaction that she had pleased him—and hopeless despair.

Two days later a box arrived, and unpacking it she found his photo. With a stifled sob she arranged it conspicuously upon a cabinet, and gave her attention to the remaining articles; but during the rest of the day she found herself involuntarily returning to the drawing-room to stand gazing upon it again.

The next morning the little maid was cleaning outside when Crewson appeared.

"Is the caretaker in?" he questioned, and receiving an affirmative reply, he entered unannounced. At the drawing-room door he stopped. The caretaker had her back towards him, but in her outstretched hand she was holding his photo, and it seemed to him she was scrutinizing his pictured features with more than idle curiosity.

Presently she took hold of a silver frame and fixed the photograph in it; then, placing it upon the cabinet again, she set beside it a similar frame without a photograph.

"For his wife's!" she muttered sadly, and turning, found his eyes fixed upon her. She uttered a little surprised scream, and recovered her composure.

"Well—you?" he questioned bewilderedly.

"Yes." She bowed slightly to hide her flushed face, and leaned heavily against the mantel to hide the fact that she was trembling.

"And you—you have furnished this house for me?"

"Yes." She choked back a sob, and continued. "I had to do it—or leave Brownlow's. And I couldn't do that without the probability of starving again. I sincerely trust I have pleased you."

"Pleased me?" he questioned hoarsely. "Heavens! To think

YOUNG FOLKS

KINGLY KINDNESS.

"What a big sigh for a little boy!" exclaimed mother, as James came in and threw off his pasteboard crown and the crimson shawl that had served for robes of state while he ruled from his throne in the apple-tree. "Are your subjects planning a revolution?"

"Oh, I'm tired of playing king," answered Jamie. "Percy threw a handful of pebbles, and aimed them straight at my crown, because I would not make him a knight."

"You are tired now," said mother. "Suppose you curl up here and drop affairs of state while you hear the story of a real little king."

"Tell it!" exclaimed Jimmie, eagerly.

"Well, this baby ruler," began mother, "we will call him King Carl, was walking one morning through a path in the palace grounds that was not so closely guarded as most of the enclosure that formed his playground. Suddenly a stone, not a handful of pebbles, Jamie, but a sharp, ugly stone crashed through a myrtle hedge and fell at the little king's feet.

The call of the governess brought the palace guards to the scene, and a quick search revealed the culprit."

"Was it a conspirator?" interrupted Jamie, in an awed tone.

"A very small one," continued his mother, "a boy no older than King Carl himself, but the guards would have seized him if the little ruler had not interfered. Going up to his enemy, he asked him, in a friendly way, what his name was, and gently persuaded him to tell why he had thrown the stone.

The tiny conspirator could not understand King Carl's kindness, for he had been taught to hate all the members of the royal family; but trying to keep back the tears, he explained that his father, once a laborer in the palace gardens, had been discharged through no fault of his own.

During the long months of idleness and want that followed, the man had grown more discouraged each day, and he talked bitterly against those who held the power to deprive him of his living.

"At last, so weak from hunger that everything looked wrong and strange to him, the little boy made up his mind that the surest way to help his father was to punish the king."

King Carl did not banish the offender, Jamie. The two boys quickly became good friends, and when the laborer's son went home he carried a basket of good things to his brothers and sisters. The next day the father went back to work for the king, and after that he taught his children to be loyal subjects."

"Is that a true story?" asked Jamie, slowly.

"Yes," replied his mother. "It is the true story of a king who did not forget that there is nothing so kindly as kindness."

Jamie was thoughtful for a moment. Then he put on his cap, instead of his crown, and started for the door. "I'm going to show

PERILS OF ELECTRICITY

ITS USE HAS BEEN THE CAUSE OF MANY ACCIDENTS.

Railroad Conductor Received a Shock—A Cripple's Plucky Act.

That electricity, though a good servant, is a bad master has been illustrated by a recent appalling accident at Olginate, in Italy, where ten persons were killed in the attempt to switch off the electric light in their houses. Flames had suddenly burst out through the fusing of the wires, and everyone who came in contact with the current, with the intention of putting out the fire, was electrocuted.

KILLED BY A MILK-CAN.

This disaster shows that the progress of science has its perils for those who are not perfectly familiar with the manipulation that new inventions require. The general use of electricity in the United States has naturally made that country the scene of a large proportion of the reported accidents of this type. One of the strangest of these befell a conductor on the Albany and Hudson Railroad. While he was adjusting the mechanism of his car his feet touched a milk-can, thus forming a short circuit. Before he could be released he was so badly burnt that he died within half an hour. At Reading, in Pennsylvania, a young man was carrying a piece of iron pipe on his shoulder when one end of it came in contact with a live electric wire, and he received a shock that proved fatal.

CRIPPLE AS LIFE-SAVER.

Not long ago, at Pittsburg, a cripple with two artificial legs found his own disability the means of saving the life of another person. As he was going one day along a street he saw a man writhing in agony at the end of a trolley-line feed-wire carrying 1,500 volts, which had broken from its moorings, and of which the poor fellow was unable to let go. The cripple caught him around the waist and succeeded in jerking him away from the wire. As the cork and wooden legs of the rescuer were non-conductors, the current could not reach the ground through his body.

A FARMER'S EXPERIENCE.

A farmer was driving along the road after a storm, when his horse suddenly dropped dead. It was crossing a pool which had been caused by a heavy rain. Into this pool had fallen the end of a broken electric wire, which had thus charged the water with a deadly current. Members of fire brigades are now carefully warned against the risks of similar occurrences. When called to fires which are caused by some mishap to electrical equipments they are careful not to turn their hose upon the blaze until they are certain that there is no risk of the stream of water becoming electrified.

In Great Britain one of the few fatal accidents reported in connection with the use of electricity occurred in a Scottish colliery. A Fifeshire miner was engaged in fastening a piece of corrugated iron on a box covering the electric cable

POINTS ON TURBANS.

Many are quite simple, resting far down on the head, and of such a convenient roundness that the trimming may be shifted from back to either side at the pleasure of the owner.

A softening touch of plaited chiffon, net or lace is used on the under surface of the straw brim. This is just the relief that many women require, for the straight line of straw across the forehead is trying in its demands for good features.

Roses and moire ribbon are used on many of the turbans. The colors may be the pale pastel shades of buff, pink and blue and look extremely well when trimming the favorite leghorns.

Tulle, net and gauze are being seized with delight, for the transparency produces an iridescent effect and the quality of the material insures a comfortable lightness of weight.

On a great number of these lace models the jeweled ornament is placed at the front and touches the forehead after the fashion of an oriental headdress.

Straw turbans have huge high-standing brims, which give a tailored line. Occasionally this is relieved by a bow of velvet.

Facings of brown or black velvet are this spring's touch. The contrast is generally becoming, and is a test of good workmanship. This latter point, of course, will mark the amateur from the expert.

SEEN IN PARIS SHOPS.

Steel ornaments are used. Raffia is used for many smart shopping bags.

Tussore and satin tailored costumes replace velvet.

The bib front is a distinctive feature of many dresses.

White belts are worn with the most elegant lingerie gowns.

The dressy colored blouse is enjoying a revival this season.

The pretty fluffy jabots are prominent in the spring neckwear.

This is essentially a silk season, with foulards to the front.

Tailor made gowns of silk will be more in evidence than ever before.

On Louis XIII. coats one sees three pocket flaps, one above the other.

A new thing in trimming is tailored costumes of wool, taffetas, or velveteen embroidered in beads or dull coloring.

Lovers of fine thread laces will rejoice at the marvelous flounceings and all over designs in Chantilly and other fine aces.

Few buttons, only sufficient supposedly to fasten something, and these handsome, are seen.

Taffeta has come back to us again, soft and supple, with a satiny sheen.

Everything in the way of changeable material will be much worn this season.

The sleeve with a shirring is a favorite style only with the woman whose arm is quite slender.

"Pleased me?" he questioned hoarsely. "Heavens! To think you have come to this!"

"We will not discuss my position, please." The tears were filling her eyes, but she spoke determinedly, and indicated the empty frame. "I have left that for—your wife's photograph. And, now, can you tell me when my services will be no longer necessary? You must understand, you must recognize that under—under the circumstances I must go."

"Ah! He told you I had married?"

"Mr. Brownlow said you were bringing a wife home from abroad."

"And knowing that, you—you—"

"I did my best for—the firm."

For a moment there was a tense silence. She stood with downcast eyes, vainly endeavoring to conceal her emotion, whilst Crewson took from his letter-case the photo of a girl!

"I presume that unless you obey my instructions now your position with the firm, as you call it, will be jeopardized?" he said.

"That is so. If there is anything—"

"Just one thing, please. If you will place that photograph in the stand you have reserved for my wife's, I think that will be all."

She shot a glance at him, and swayed dangerously. For a few seconds she hesitated, and then stretched out her hand for the card.

"If you insist," she commenced, and stopped. The room appeared to whirl, and her sight was blurred with unshed tears, but dashing them away, she looked at the photograph in her hand again. There was no mistake. It was a picture of herself.

She glanced at Crewson.

"You mean you want me?" she sobbed.

For a moment he did not reply. He took her in his arms and kissed the tear-stained face until it glowed with eager happiness.

"I mean just this, Nell," he muttered softly. "There appears to have been a misunderstanding; but never mind that now. The wife I want, the little girl I came over expecting to find waiting for me when I landed at Liverpool, is the 'Girl from Brownlow's,' and perhaps she will complete her duties by"—he laughed gaily—"doing as she is told."

And Miss Gordon did. She took down the silver frame, and fixing in her own photograph, placed it, with a shy look, beside Crewson's.—London Answers.

HOME MISSIONARIES.

Isaiah 52: 7; Rom. 10: 14, 15.

"How beautiful on the mountains Are they who preach the word?"

Thus said the gifted prophet Who witnessed for the Lord, And in that glorious kingdom Which everywhere extends, Adorned with His own beauty Are those whom Jesus sends.

As heirs of that salvation Which they receive by grace, Each earnest call for service, Most gladly they embrace. They go where He directs them, Though great may be the cost; For by their work the Saviour Still seeks and saves the lost.

In village, town or city They view the blight of sin And seek by prayerful labor Immortal souls to win. Upon the pine-clad mountains, Or on the fertile plain, They tell of that great fountain Which cleanses every stain.

They find the homeless workmen In forest, field, and mine; And near the camp-fire seated They speak of grace divine. They seek to make disciples, Sincere in heart and aim; And they baptize believers Into the Triune name.

They find a place for preaching In hall, or school, or tent, They bear to little children The message God has sent. They help the stricken mourners To patient be and brave; They tell of light that shineth Beyond the silent grave.

The Lord most plainly calls us In this great work to share And be with them united By gifts and life and prayer, And when the Lord returneth And other lights grow dim, He will in glory own us, If thus we honor Him.

MUFFINS.

Bacon Muffins.—Two cupfuls of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one teaspoonful of salt, or butter, one cupful of water. Flavor with crisp chips of bacon broken in small pieces, bake in gem pans.

Corn Muffins.—One cupful of flour, one cupful of corn meal, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one teaspoonful of salt, one mixing-spoonful of sugar, three mixing-spoonfuls of melted butter or lard, one egg, and one cupful of water.

Late Muffins.—One-third cupful of butter, one-fourth cupful of sugar, one beaten egg, three-fourths of a cupful of milk, two cupfuls of flour sifted with a half teaspoonful of salt and two teaspoonfuls baking powder, scant half pound of chopped dates seeded. Cut in small pieces. Bake in gem pans.

In Great Britain one of the few fatal accidents reported in connection with the use of electricity occurred in a Scottish colliery. A Fifeshire miner was engaged in fastening a piece of corrugated iron on a box covering the electric cable when the nail he was using pierced the cable and he received a shock that instantly killed him.

AT A SEASIDE RESORT.

Last year, in one of our seaside resorts, a young man who was a passenger in a new electric tramcar was getting out, and, in order to steady himself, passed his left hand along one of the hand-rails, to which straps are attached. Near the door he suddenly felt a severe shock, and found that he could not move his hand from the rail, neither could he move his left foot. A friend seized him and pulled him clear of the rails. He was taken to a surgery, where it was found that his left hand was severely burnt. It is supposed that through some leakage of current the hand-rails must have become charged with electricity.

An accident of a very different kind was reported a few months ago at a meeting of the Electricity Committee of the Acton (England) Council. It was announced that one of the transformers at a generating station had broken down through a mouse, getting into it, and that the repairs would cost $250.

DON'T BE AFRAID OF SWEETS

"Give children plenty of pure sugar, taffy and butter scotch and they'll have little need of cod liver oil," says Dr. Woods Hutchinson. "In short, sugar is, after meat, bread and butter, easily our next most important and necessary food. You can put the matter to a test very easily. Just leave off the pie, pudding and other desserts at your lunch or midday dinner. You'll be astonished to find out how quickly you'll feel 'empty' again, and how 'unfinished' the meal will seem. You can't get any workman to accept a dinner pail without pie in it. And he's absolutely right. The only thing that can take the place of sugar is beer or wine. It is a significant fact that the free lunch counters run in connection with bars furnish every imaginable thing except sweets. Even the restaurants and the lunch grills attached to saloons or bars often refuse to serve desserts of any sort. They know their business. The more sugar and sweets a man takes at a meal, the less alcohol he wants. Conversely nearly every drinking man will tell you he has lost his taste for sweets. The more candy a nation consumes the less alcohol."

ILLITERACY IN BELGIUM.

In some parts of Belgium 60 per cent. of the population cannot read or write. Education is not compulsory and the government, which is clerical, opposes the bill which the Liberals and Socialists are endeavoring to secure for compulsory education. The question is now before parliament. The government insists that the child belongs to his parents entirely, and that they cannot be forced to give him any education without infringing their rights to freedom or action.

FATTEST MAN IN WORLD.

Magistrate in France Who Weighed 807 Pounds.

According to the newspapers a magistrate who recently died in Paris, France, was the fattest and heaviest man in the world. It is claimed that the magistrate weighed 807 pounds, that he was so stout that he could neither walk nor get into a carriage and that he proceeded to and from his office in a two-wheeled car, which was lowered with the shafts in the air, so as to enable him to place his back on the floor and be raised after desperate exertion. A strong horse was then harnessed to the car, and so the magistrate made the little journeys in a recumbent position. It is added that a window had to be demolished to get the coffin out of the house for the funeral, and that no hearse could have met the emergency a huge and very solid cart had to be used to take it to the church and the cemetery.

FISH.

Haddock Souffle.—One cupful of cold baked or boiled haddock, one cupful of mashed potatoes, mixed together, one-half cupful of milk, added gradually; salt and pepper to taste; stir in one egg well beaten, put in a buttered mold or dish and set in the oven till hot; then beat the white of another egg stiff and stir into it the yolk, well beaten, with salt and pepper. Heap over the fish and brown.

Pate of Salt Cod.—Boil one cupful of oyster liquor, stir in two tablespoons cornstarch wet with cold milk. When it thickens add three tablespoons of butter and a little pepper, then one cupful of fish, which has been soaked, boiled, and flaked. Heat and stir in one cupful warm milk and three chopped hard boiled eggs. Take from fire and cover a pot of boiling water fifteen minutes. Line a buttered baking dish with puff paste, prickin at the bottom. Cut a round piece for a cover and bake separately. Bake both in a quick oven. When almost cold turn out the shell and fill with fish, fit on top, and invert on a hot platter. Garnish with parsley springs and lemon slices.

ADVENTURES OF A TRAVELLER IN INDIA.

Natives Show Their Affection for Their Wives by Loading Them With Trinkets.

"When you are travelling in India you are apt to have strange companions," said E. C. Thurber, managing director of the British branch of one of the American oil companies. "I remember a night that I spent on the train going from the north of India down to Lucknow, which furnished the most uncomfortable three or four hours of my life.

"First class coaches on the Indian railways are divided into compartments containing two sofas and two upper berths, which are let down at night. You furnish your own bedding.

"When I got on the train I was the only foreigner on it, and I had a compartment to myself. So at bedtime I turned in with a great deal of satisfaction confident that I would not be disturbed.

"About 2 o'clock in the morning as the train stopped at a junction point for the railway from the sacred city of Benares, I was awakened by a commotion outside and a lot of shouting and screaming such as you hear only in India. The solitary lamp that lighted the compartment had gone out and

I WAS IN DARKNESS.

"I was turning over with a growl at being awakened when I heard the door handle creak and a voice demanded in fairly good English whether I was the only occupant of the compartment. I replied that I was, and then in the gloom a man climbed into the compartment. Then he reached out to assist some object—what it was I could not make out—into the car.

"There was a sound like the rattling of chains. I thought at first the traveller was lifting up a big dog. Whatever it was, it crept along the other side of the car, jumped upon the sofa opposite, and remained perfectly quiet.

"No words passed between the man and the object, and after lying there a few minutes I began to get uncomfortable. Perhaps it was a young tiger, or a big monkey, or perhaps it was some prisoner. Or perhaps here I remembered having heard that a maniac woman had escaped somewhere in this very neighborhood a few days before.

"Just as I had reached this point in my reflections the man, in whose hands I had noticed something long and thin, like a rifle barrel, got up. The end of the object swung very near my face as he turned it around and put it in a rack near me, and I broke out in

LONDON MEDICAL EXPERTS INDORSE HEALTH DOCTRINE

Dr. Wallace, Woman Physician, Says Conditions Must be Right Before Ordeal.

Dr. Wallace, a well-known woman physician of London, and editor of the Herald of Health, is a strong believer in fasting for certain cases. "Fasting is most efficient as a cure," she said in the course of a recent interview. "I have known it to work remarkable cures in my own experience. The person undergoing the 'no food' course should take nothing but distilled water and should exercise caution. The weight should be taken before starting the fast, and if it is below the normal food should be taken in reasonable quantities until the patient is the right weight and ready to undertake the complete fast. A fast should not be started in cold weather, for that takes away much of the heat and energy of the organism.

HOW THE CURE WORKED.

"In my own experience I have known a patient to fast for fifteen days and derive only advantage from the ordeal. He had suffered from serious internal troubles since boyhood, and he came to me to ask advice about the fruit diet I recommended. I told him the fasting cure would do him good. When I saw him again several weeks later I hardly recognized him. He was the picture of health. He held himself upright, and his step was alert and vigorous. His eyes were bright, his tongue a good color and his pulse normal. I learned to my surprise—for I never intended he should go so long without food—that he had fasted for fifteen days, taking only distilled water during all that time. And it certainly cured him.

FASTED FOR SIX WEEKS.

"Another interesting case was brought to my notice by my friend, Dr. Hiller, in Canada. A working-man, suffering from a tumor, fasted six weeks, keeping at work all the time, and he completely overcame his complaint. I have known many cases of short fasts of ten, six and five days, and the members of my family have fasted with much benefit. I know of a young girl typewriter who fasts for one week in each year regularly in order to preserve her figure. I have no hesitation in saying that fasting is a great curative agency, and of the utmost value in many cases of disease and illness."

A leading specialist in the West End of London also expressed himself as a believer in the fast cure—for the rich."

"For that class," he said, "it is an excellent health reviver; but for the poor it is extremely dangerous. The reason of this lies in the fact that the wealthy are inclined to indulge in luxuries every day of their lives, with the result that their systems become overstocked with poisonous matter. There is no doubt that well-fed people eat far too much, and that a considerable number of cases that come before the

THE FEARFUL STRUGGLE OF A STEEPLE JACK.

Joseph Smith's Brave Act in Saving Fellow Workman From Suicide.

Steeple jacks often find themselves in tight places while exercising the perilous profession. Joseph Smith, famous throughout England as the "Lancashire Steeple Jack," and whose business is so prosperous that he travels about the country in a private car, told the writer the following exciting episode in his career:—

He and his mate were engaged at the top of a lofty factory chimney, 296 feet in height, when his mate suddenly went raving mad and tried to commit suicide by leaping over the top. As the madman went over, Smith caught him by the ankle, and notwithstanding the maniac's plunging and kicking,

SMITH HELD BRAVELY ON.

Leaning over the platform, he endeavored with his disengaged hand to reach the belt which all steeple jacks wear around the waist, but he could not manage it. Presently the crowd who had assembled saw the struggling body slowly, by sheer strength, raised till the belt came within reach. The madman, finding his efforts at self-destruction being thwarted, turned on his preserver and bit his thumb to the bone.

He was, however, despite his struggles, drawn upon the platform, and then began another terrible struggle. Many were the conjectures among the crowd as to the meaning of the fearful scene at the top of the chimney, one individual, who "seed it aw," asserting positively that "they've been wrestling and feighting, and Smith threw t'other, who went o'er th' edge o' t' stage."

Suddenly Smith raises his hand and delivers a blow with the hammer on the head of the man he has just lifted out of

THE REACH OF DEATH!

There is no more struggling. The man is quiet enough now!

The crowd looked at one another in amazement, wondering what it all meant. "Mit as well ave droppit 'im to t' foot of t' chimney as knock 'is brains out wi' a hammer," says one man, grimly. Smith is standing up working at his ropes. He kneels down, and in a few minutes the head and shoulders of his companion are hanging over the edge of the stage, Smith having attached a rope to him. The next moment he pushes him off and slowly lowers him to the ground.

There is a rush to the foot of the chimney. "He's dead!" passes through the crowd. A doctor is soon in attendance. Smith descends rapidly to the ground with a smile on his face, actually laughing. "How is he, doctor?" he asks. "He's very bad," is the reply. "I don't think, however, the blow has done more than stop his struggles. He's still in the fit."

CRIME IN ENGLAND.

PRECOCIOUS BOYS WHO HAVE AMAZED THE WORLD.

Remarkable Examples of Genius in Child Painters, Actors and Musicians.

This is the age of prodigies. In the world of art, on the stage and concert platform, and even in the pulpit, children have been astonishing the world with their genius, and earning incomes calculated to arouse the envy of the most successful business man. It is only a few weeks ago since it was announced that amongst the exhibitors at the French Salon this year was a twelve-year-old artist, named Marcel Lavallard, the son of a haberdasher, who commenced to paint pictures when he was six.

This is the first time in the history of the French Salon that so young an artist has exhibited, although a few years ago Henri Cortes was admitted when he was nearly thirteen. Lavallard's success recalls that of Tada Styka, a boy painter of thirteen, who had two canvases accepted by the Salon five years ago, and the work of Viscount De Soissons, whose water colors and oil paintings were exhibited at the Dore Gallery in 1904. The young viscount was then sixteen, and in addition to attracting much attention on account of his skill as an artist he has gained a big reputation as an author, having written several serial stories.

ENGLISH ARTISTS.

English painters appear to be somewhat less precocious than their French comrades. Sir Edwin Landseer, it is true, was admitted to the Académie at the age of thirteen, but Mr. Walter Crane was already sixteen and Mr. Marcus Stone, Millais, and Watts seventeen before they secured the coveted honor.

It is to the stage and concert platform, however, to which one must turn to find the most remarkable examples of precocious genius. Whether the numberless child actors and musicians who have made their debut lately will fulfill the promise of their early years remains, of course, to be seen; but the present and past history of acting and music contains some remarkable instances of clever children who have continued to win fame year after year throughout life.

MARVELLOUS MUSICIANS.

There was Jenny Lind, for instance, who, at five or six years of age, astounded everybody with the purity of her voice and her wonderful skill in its management. The pianoforte playing of Meyerbeer, Mozart, and Mendelssohn, when they were six years of age, aroused the admiration of every critic, while when he was eight Paganini composed a sonata of so difficult a nature that none but himself could execute it. He performed it in public at the age of nine.

At the age of three Paderewski could play the piano, while Lady Halle, when she made her first public appearance at six years of age, that it was only one of those long staves which the people in India use in walking.

"Then I tried to engage the man in conversation, but he answered in monosyllables. I was lying in my pajamas, and I became so uneasy that I drew on my trousers and got up. I asked the man whence he had come, and he replied that he had just reached the junction on the train from Benares, which was an hour late. He was so short in his replies that by the time we reached the next station I had made up my mind to get out and complain to the station master.

"So when we stopped, I alighted and found that functionary, who at my request turned his lantern into the carriage, but I could not see the object on the further berth.

"Is it customary to allow prisoners to travel in first carriages?" I demanded.

"Salib, I know the gentleman," he replied, "and he has no prisoner."

I was not satisfied with the guard's reply and insisted upon his turning the lantern into the compartment again. At this the Hindu inside, who had been dozing, arose and came out upon the platform. He exchanged some words in Hindostani with the station master, and then he turned to me.

"Sir, it is my wife that I have travelling with me," he said.

"Well, I wondered what a man was doing dragging his wife about with him by a chain, for the rattling continued at intervals, so I decided to remain up, and

BEGAN TO SMOKE.

The traveller thawed after his explanation, and I found him a very intellectual man. He gave me much information about northern India. Suddenly he asked me whether I belonged to the craft and upon my replying that I did, he informed me that he was master of his lodge.

As daylight approached I would cast an inquiring look in the direction of the other occupant of the compartment. When it got light I found to my surprise that the woman, whose face was heavily veiled, was swathed in a beautiful silk robe. She wore sandals and as I glanced at them I discovered that what had aroused my alarm was a multitude of anklets and bracelets.

It is the custom in India for a man to show affection for his wife by loading her with such trinkets, and that particular Hindu displayed more devotion in that way than any other I ever came across. He did not introduce her to me, nor did he address a single word to her while they were in the car. He had violated the road's rules by bringing his wife into the compartment, but knowing I was not a Hindu he thought I would not object. The following day I learned that he was the chief Government auditor for the railways of that district."

SAVAGES WANT HATS.

The inhabitants of the Nicobar Islands, a group in the Indian Ocean, have an extraordinary fancy for old hats, and a regular trade in such castoff headgear is carried on between Calcutta and Nicobar, the much-desired headpieces being paid for in cocoanuts. A tall chimney-pot is the favorite among the Nicobarians, and the acme of fashion is considered to be a high white hat with a black hatband. This is worth from fifty to sixty cocoanuts.

COMETS ABSORBED BY SUN.

Fate of Periodic Comet is Always Sealed.

It is the fate of all comets that have tails to lose a portion of their substance every time they visit the sun. The particles given off are lost to the comet beyond recall, and are picked up by the first planet that chances to come along. But the more substantial part which constitutes the head of a comet may retreat from the dangerous proximity of the sun and wander through the ether of space for thousands of years without suffering further loss of substance. It may be possible, therefore, for a non-periodic comet, one that has not been "captured" by the solar system, to visit other suns than ours and shed their substance in remote regions of the stellar universe, hence the life of a cometary wanderer may be a matter of millions of years. But in the case of a periodic comet the situation is entirely different; their fate is sealed. They are destined to suffer shipwreck and gradual absorption of their substance by the sun or his family of planets. Lexell's comet of 1770 was probably wrecked by Jupiter. Encke's comet, which is due to appear again in 1911, if there is anything left of it, is being drawn into the sun itself through the joint influence of Jupiter, Mercury and the "resisting medium" which surrounds the sun. Biela's comet divided into two before our eyes and then broke up entirely, while the great comet of 1882 gave indications that it was about to break up into four parts, and it is now generally believed that this comet itself was only one of the parts into which an enormously large comet was divided perhaps many thousand years ago.

LESSONS OF THE PARIS FLOOD.

Comparative immunity for a hundred years seems to have made the French forgetful of the danger to their great capital from sudden floods in the River Seine. But the lesson taught this year will evidently have important consequences. It is suggested, among other things, that a large channel be constructed to lead off the flood-waters from a point above the city to a junction with the regular channel below the city limits. The cost of this is reckoned at, at least $20,000,000. But Paris lies in a great basin, and the proposed cut-off would not save some of the suburbs from inundation. Another suggested solution is to construct in the higher valleys, through which the Seine and its two principal tributaries, the Yonne and the Marne, flow, great reservoirs, to be filled in times of flood. This water, it is argued, would be useful for irrigation purposes, as it could be distributed at any time after the inundation had ceased. It is probable, also, that local protection will be secured by means of higher embankments within the city.

A woman's clothing was the despair of the hygienist. Children and girls were more sensibly clad, but when girls grew up they were often clothed in a way which made them unable to walk, run or breathe. Weighty skirts, low-necked gowns, "pneumonia blouses," the modern hat, the high-heeled shoe with its pointed toe, were all condemned. But then women will have it so and so it will remain.

CRIME IN ENGLAND.

Recent Statistics Reveal Alarming Increase.

Crime of all kinds would seem to be increasing in England to a rather uncomfortable, if not alarming extent. So, at any rate, one would gather from the Blue Book, dealing with the criminal statistics for the year 1908, which has just been completed. It shows that the number of persons tried for indictable offenses was greater than in any year for which figures are available, and that the rate of increase was higher than in any year since 1861.

One of the great arguments in favor of the school boards instituted forty years ago was that with education crime would be abolished out of the land, and that the expenditure on the schools would be amply compensated by the lower charges for police and prisons. A study of the Blue Book shows that these expectations have been sadly falsified, and that, especially in offenses against property, crime shows no sign of actual diminution.

As has been pointed out in previous Blue Books, about fifteen-sixteenths of the crimes recorded are offenses against property, such as housebreaking. The number tried for assaults and offenses against the person in 1908 was 2,742, an increase of 5.6 per cent. on the previous year's figures; for offenses against property with violence, 4,076, an increase of 22.1 per cent.; for offenses against property without violence, 39,603, an increase of 10.8 per cent.; for forgery and offenses against currency, 391, an increase of 26.5 per cent. The police estimated that on the first Tuesday in April, 1908, there were 4,255 habitual criminals at large.

Endeavoring to explain the cause of this exceptional increase in crime in 1908, the report points out that it coincided with marked depression in trade and an unusual amount of unemployment. Nearly five-sixths of the increase took place in the principal mining and manufacturing counties, less than one-sixth in London and the adjacent counties.

WOMEN'S CLOTHING.

Is the Despair of the Modern Hygienist.

Dr. Haig Ferguson in a lecture at the Edinburgh Royal Infirmary, recently, had some severe things to say about the clothing of the adult woman. It was hampered by fashion and superstition, and nothing could be a greater tribute to the strong nerves and powerful muscles of women than the fact that their health had survived for centuries their habits of clothing.

A woman's clothing was the despair of the hygienist. Children and girls were more sensibly clad, but when girls grew up they were often clothed in a way which made them unable to walk, run or breathe. Weighty skirts, low-necked gowns, "pneumonia blouses," the modern hat, the high-heeled shoe with its pointed toe, were all condemned. But then women will have it so and so it will remain.

ture that none but himself could execute it. He performed it in public at the age of nine.

At the age of three Paderewski could play the piano, while Lady Halle, when she made her first public appearance at six years of age, created such enthusiasm that a tour was instantly arranged, which included such musical centres as Leipzig, Berlin, and Breslau. At eight Lady Halle was playing at the London Philharmonic Concerts.

PULPIT PRODIGIES.

Two or three years ago quite a number of child-preachers were attracting attention on both sides of the Atlantic, notably Frances Stern, the twelve-year-old Doncaster girl, who often had audiences numbering close upon 2,000; Lonnie Dennis, who was only five when he preached to an audience of over 3,000 in New York, and included amongst his sermons one which told how he was called to the ministry at four years of age; and Jack Cooke, the Manchester boy, who at a very early age determined to become a second D. L. Moody. He preached his first sermon when he was eleven and two years later conducted many successful missions in the States.

Who knows but what they may follow in the footsteps of Spurgeon, who was an active member of the Baptist connexion while he was still in knickerbockers, and preached his first sermon at the age of sixteen? Before he was twenty Exeter Hall was not large enough to hold his congregations. George Fox, the evangelist and founder of the Society of Friends, was quite a little boy when he started preaching at a tavern, and George Whitefield and John Wesley both commenced preaching at a very early age.

KNEW THIRTEEN LANGUAGES.

It has often been said that the most amazing example of precocious genius on record is furnished by John Stuart Mill, who at three years of age was learning the Greek alphabet, and at eight had read in the original many Greek authors. Then he began to learn Euclid, Algebra, and Latin, and before he was twelve was made to teach the younger members of the family.

The precocity of Sir William Rowan Hamilton, the celebrated mathematician, is often overlooked. He excelled in the study of languages, and is said to have known at least thirteen at the age of twelve. At three years of age he was a very good reader of English and considerably advanced in arithmetic. At four he was a good geographer, and at five able to read and translate Latin, Greek, and Hebrew. Then he added a knowledge of Italian and French to his learning before going on with Arabic and Sanskrit. —London Tit-Bits.

GILDED COACHES.

Kings and Queens May Not Usually be Known by the Carriage They Keep.

Tourists are often surprised at seeing a king or queen riding in an ordinary carriage unadorned with any of the supposed pomp of royalty—no gilding, no purple and embroidered hammercloths, no outriders in scarlet livery, perhaps not even a crown on the panels. Yet this, according to a writer in the Travel Magazine, is the way in which kings and queens ordinarily go out, the great gilded coaches being reserved for state occasions. But there are what might be called semi-state carriages in which royal personages ride on such occasions as the laying of a corner-stone or the opening of a hospital or bazaar.

These are generally barouches or landaus, but without a box or a coachman, drawn by four horses, two of which are mounted by grooms, with a rumble behind on which two footmen are perched. Outriders attend them and sometimes an escort of cavalry. Queen Elena of Italy is wont to ride in such a carriage, but her mother-in-law, the Queen Dowager Margherita, prefers an automobile to a horse-drawn vehicle. However, when the latter is more appropriate to the occasion she adapts herself to the circumstances and drives out in a plain landau.

STATE COACHES.

In striking contrast to this unpretentious rig is the Russian state coach bearing the gilded carvings, its horses caparisoned in gorgeous but heavy harness and saddlecloths and led by grooms in the brilliant livery of the imperial house. The Norwegian state coach looks beside the Russian sombre and plain. It has something about it which at once suggests the hearse. It is not often used, for the Norwegian royalties are quite democratic and prefer private and more comfortable carriages.

When the German Empress goes driving she uses very much such a carriage as any well to do merchant might own. She cares nothing for splendid state equipages and is most often to be seen driving with her young daughter in a simple landau or victoria.

The Emperor Franz Josef of Austria during his annual summer sojourn at the Castle of Schoenbrunn on the outskirts of Vienna drives into the capital in an open carriage quite unattended immediately after breakfast, arriving at the old palace situated in the heart of the city soon after 8 o'clock. Day after day he thus offers himself as an easy target for an assassin's shot.

It frequently happens that persons with a grievance station themselves at some point along the route always taken by the imperial carriage and run toward it, one of their number waving

GERMANY MUST BE OVERCOME BY FORCE.

British Officer Tells How Britain Can Maintain Her Supremacy.

Sir Edmund Cox, a British officer in the Indian service, has outlined in a recent magazine article a drastic plan by which to put an end to the German naval menace.

If Germany will not stop her naval expansion at once, he says in effect, Britain must save the nations from the curse of over-armament by sinking an once every ship that flies the German flag.

This is the policy, Sir Edmund Cox says, "which a Cromwell, a Pitt, a Palmerston, a Disraeli, would have adopted long ago."

REDUCTION FUTILE.

"The Hague Conference showed the futility of all attempts at joint reduction of armaments. Germany was ready enough to agree to a reduction of English armaments, but she took the opportunity of accelerating her own programme.

"Is there no other alternative to this endless, yet futile, competition in ship-building?

"Yes, there is.

"This is that alternative—the only possible one. It is to say to Germany: 'All that you have been doing constitutes a series of unfriendly acts. Your fair words go for nothing. Once for all you must put an end to your warlike preparations. If we are not satisfied that you do so, we shall forthwith sink every battleship and cruiser that you possess.'

"The situation that you have created is intolerable. If you are determined to fight us, if you insist upon war, war you shall have; but the time shall be of our choosing and not of yours, and that time shall be now."

UNION OF POWERS.

"Not a shot need be fired. The whole of Europe, with the exception of Austria, would gladly support England in an ultimatum demanding the instant cessation of this universal danger.

"The other powers have no wish to see Europe under the heel of a German Napoleon."

The late German historian, Professor von Treitschke, said: "We have settled our accounts with Austria-Hungary, with France, and with Russia. The last settlement, the settlement with England, will probably be the lengthiest and most difficult."

"I insist that the position is intolerable. And the humor of it, the grim irony of it, is that by our effete fiscal system we are largely helping Germany to pay for her navy."

DIET RECOMMENDED FOR MENTAL DISCORD.

Advanced Vegetarians Promote Novel Cult in Great Britain.

Under the inspiring title of "leguminotherapy" the advanced vegetarians of Great Britain have now classified the effects of the various vegetables on character.

Laziness, bad temper, lack of "grit" and ambition become merely temporary evils, which may be speedily overcome by timely recourse to the right vegetable, declare these scientific vegetarians.

Housewives, too, have only to work "leguminotherapeutically"—to provide the right vegetables for the right temperaments, and the serenity of home is assured. The secretary of a company owning large vegetarian restaurants in various parts of London said that leguminotherapy was thoroughly scientific and practical, and he, for one, fully believed in it.

"The idea is to take various common vegetables separately and to analyze them," he said, "and, after deciding what salt or type of proteid a 'patient' lacks, to dose him with the particular vegetable which contains the highest percentage of that salt or proteid.

WALNUTS FOR LISTLESSNESS.

"To take an obvious example: Carrots, besides containing a large amount of albuminoid and other forms of flesh producing and nourishing proteid, contain also a high percentage of common arsenic.

"As everyone knows, taken in strict moderation, arsenic has a soothing and numbing effect. Hence a large allowance of carrots would be prescribed as an antidote for 'nerves' and bad temper.

"As an antidote for listlessness and anemia, nuts, and walnuts in particular, afford another good example. It is common knowledge that all nuts contain a fairly high percentage of nitrogen, the extraordinary nourishing effect of which is well known.

"Then spinach, on account of the iron it contains, is recommended as a general tonic for people who are dispirited through lack of sufficient exercise or fresh air, while cauliflower and cabbage, on the other hand, are rather to be avoided by the average man, since the larger amount of useless fat they contain tends to vulgarize and stultify.

POTATOE'S EVIL EFFECT.

"Potatoes, again, despite their popularity, are a singularly bad food for character forming. Potatoes are composed almost wholly of starch, though they may satisfy hunger by sheer bulk, they never feed the organisms.

"Apathy and general 'mussiness' are the results of a large potato diet, and so potatoes only enter into leguminotherapy in a negative way and are recommended as a vegetables to avoid."

MICROBES ARE FOUND TO EXIST ON THEM.

Scientist Discovers Bacillus of Typhoid on Their Sticky Backs.

Few people realize what every time they lick a postage stamp that has been exposed to the atmosphere or handled by other people they are liable to absorb into their systems multitudes of more or less virulent microbes.

A very distinguished British scientist has just concluded some remarkable tests to prove his theory that many diseases are frequently so communicated. He bought some stamps at a post office and placed some of them straightway in tubes, which were put in an incubator.

Then he exposed the rest of the stamps, gummed side upwards, for four hours in a room with an open window on a damp day, afterwards similarly testing them.

Both sets of stamps were found to bear noxious organisms, but the stamps previously exposed to moist air had five times as many as the others.

"NEVER LICK STAMPS," is his advice. He explained that he found in the gum staphylococci, or grape-like clusters, of kinds which under favorable conditions might produce blood-poisoning.

He also found many bacilli—the majority perfectly harmless, although others undoubtedly noxious, which it would take time to identify—could be similarly picked up.

"These grape-like organisms," he said, "are blown about in the air clinging to fragments of dust. They do not go about alone. The dust settles on a stamp, and the organisms go, too, the gum being a hospitable medium."

"There are also five times as many organisms on a stamp that has been handled than otherwise. Fingers are specially likely to impart organisms to the gum because they are always slightly moist, though they may appear dry. Typhoid and scarlet fever are diseases that appear peculiarly liable to be conveyed by stamps."

"But it is consoling to remember that some of the most virulent diseases can only be cultivated in media containing blood-serum. Contact of the kind described would not convey them."

"Dirty stamp wetters of the type used in most offices might easily become

HIGHLY DANGEROUS.

They certainly would be more frequently cleaned, and I suggest that every household should keep a flat tin box with a layer of felt for moistening stamps; the felt should be thoroughly soaked with water to which a few drops of glycerine have been added to keep it moist, and a few drops of an antiseptic, such as carbolic, also. Even then, of course, the liquid should be frequently changed."

In nine cases out of ten they are immediately seized by the detectives on the watch, which shows the thoroughness of the precautions taken, but whenever such an incident is noticed by the Emperor he orders the persons arrested to be liberated, beckons them to the side of the carriage, takes the petition himself and in a few gracious words promises to give it his attention.

The most valuable as well as the most dazzling carriage in the world is preserved at the palace of the Trianon at Versailles. It was constructed for King Charles X. of France and was first used by him on the occasion of his coronation. From pole to hind wheels the vehicle is thickly covered with gold, which gives it quite a magnificent appearance. It cost more than $200,000.

The next most costly carriage is owned by her Majesty Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands and was a gift from her loving subjects of Amsterdam. Exceedingly handsome this royal coach is decorated in the style of the Dutch renaissance and the interior is luxuriously upholstered in embroidered cream colored silk. It was a wedding present and its cost was $100,000.

KILLED BY DEAD BOERS.

At the battle of Pieter's Hill, shortly before the relief of Ladysmith, only three officers of the Royal Inniskilling came out unscathed. Colonel Thackeray was shot down, but not killed, within eighty yards of the Boer trenches. Nearly forty hours elapsed before the ambulance advanced to where the wounded lay. Seeing the colonel's plight and fearing he must die of thirst, two privates of the regiment went to his succor, bearing him water. Both these heroes, as they bent over their colonel were shot, and he himself, who might otherwise have survived, was suffocated beneath the weight of their dead bodies.

HOW WEASELS CARRY EGGS.

On a recent Wednesday morning a weasel was surprised crossing the public highway leading from Jedburgh into Oxnam Water, says the Scotsman. It was observed to be carrying something under its chin and pressed against its slender neck, and when a collie dog belonging to one of the onlookers made a dash at the little creature it dropped its burden—a hen's egg—and gliding under the roadside hedge disappeared in the woodland. On being picked up the egg was found to be without a crack. The nearest poultry run is about three hundred yards distant from the place where the weasel was intercepted.

What a Traveller Saw on the Saskatchewan River.

A short time ago the corner-stone was laid of a magnificent provincial legislative building at Regina, capital of Saskatchewan. The rapid settlement and development of the country has been remarkable. That the region is not, as yet, over populated, but still offers room for the would-be settler, is shown by two incidents, quoted from an article by Agnes C. Laut in Scribner's Magazine. The author travelled fifteen hundred miles down the Saskatchewan River, mostly by canoe.

At Cedar Lake we found one white family.

"Isn't it lonely and dangerous for your little family, so far from a doctor?" I asked.

"Oh, yes," he answered. "It is lonely, but not dangerous in case of illness. Why, last winter, when my little boy was ill, I had to take the dog-train only fifty-five miles for a doctor."

Paddling up to Cedar Lake post, the ducks flew so low overhead that we could have hit them with the paddle, and the old ganders did not bother to honk a "get-up" when we came on big flocks bobbing and wading among the reeds.

Suddenly all of us gasped and dropped our paddles.

"What on earth is that?" asked some one.

I have heard old-timers tell stories and have lived many years in the West, but I never heard of anything equal to what I now saw with my own eyes. It seemed like the dream of delirium tremens of some old hunter.

I thought it was a shallow of small drift until the sticks began to move.

"There are millions! there are millions!" exclaimed Sexsmith. "I've lived twenty years in this country, and I've never seen anything like that."

We drifted close to the reeds and looked. Then some one hit the water with paddle, and the whole surface lifted, a live mass of wild fowl, ganders, honking, honking in confused circles, white duck, black duck, young teals, old mallards—the air was quiver with a whistling of wings—the creatures did not know enough to be afraid.

It would not have been sport, it would have been slaughter to hunt them there. You could have waded out and caught them in your hands. Our wanderings had brought us into a secluded and primeval haunt of wild fowl.

THE GALVESTON CAUSEWAY.

The third great project of Galveston, Texas, since the storm of 1900, in which 6,000 lives and $20,000,000 worth of property were lost, is a concrete causeway now building over the two miles of Galveston Bay intervening between the mainland of Texas and the city of Galveston. It will consist of a protected roadway, a concrete arch bridge and a lift draw-bridge, and will cost about $1,500,000.

The protected roadway, or dirt portion of the causeway, is to be at either end; the concrete arch bridge, 2,335 feet in length, is to span the middle, and the lift draw-bridge is to be in the centre of the arch bridge.

WHEN ROYALTY REPRIMANDS

Candidate Used Royal Standard—Officer Contradicted the King.

It is seldom that King Edward finds it necessary to rebuke one of his own subjects, but such an occasion took place a week or so back. A London election candidate, unmindful of the fact that the royal standard is the personal emblem of the King, and its use by private individuals is illegal, issued a number of election cards on which the royal standard was lavishly displayed, thereby giving the impression that his candidature was supported by his Majesty.

The King's attention was, however, drawn to this infringement, and an official document despatched from Sandringham had the effect of causing the cards to be immediately withdrawn from publication.

No one is less ready to take offence than the King, for more ready to pardon one when the offence is unintentional, but his Majesty never permits a liberty to be taken with him, and, if the people do so, they must suffer the consequences which their offence entails.

In court circles it is a serious matter to incur royal displeasure. The man or woman who does so intentionally ceases to be recognized by his Majesty, which means social extinction. The offender's name is struck out of the visiting list of every person who is anybody in society, and should the offender be a man, he is politely informed that his resignation from his club or clubs would not be out of place.

No man or woman of social repute will in future know him, and if he be in the army or navy he has no option but to resign, for he will find himself cut dead by every one of his brother officers.

In fact, a few years back a retired naval officer, who was a notorious bully, flatly contradicted a statement made by King Edward, then Prince of Wales. The King passed over the officer's rudeness at the time, but some days later an equerry presented himself at the officer's residence and politely informed him that his Royal Highness was not desirous of his acquaintance in the future.

From that moment the officer was cut by everybody in society, and although he tried to brazen the matter out, he eventually left England altogether and took up his residence abroad. There he sank lower and lower in the social scale, until not long ago the news of his death in a New York street brawl came as a fitting ending to his notorious career.

There are 5 admirals of the fleet, 13 admirals, 22 vice-admirals, and 55 rear-admirals on the active list of the British Navy.

THIN AIR AS A MEDICINE.

Cabinet Administrates Artificial Dose of Mountain Atmosphere.

The doctors are supplying people with so many imitations that it isn't very surprising to have them offer us a substitute for mountain air. They have a pneumatic cabinet in which they can supply the air pressure of any given altitude. Some physicians use this cabinet with—so they say—good results.

The patient gets inhalations of rarefied air to suit his case and capacity. A reduction in the atmospheric pressure of about half a pound to the square inch is said to be sufficient for most purposes. The seances are given every day, and gradually increased in length from two minutes to six or eight minutes.

Rarefied air as found at great heights induces a condition known as mountain sickness or balloon sickness, and consists of increased heart action, more rapid respiration, headache, followed by grave symptoms as the rarefaction increases, and ending in death.

There are frequently minute hemorrhages into the spinal cord as the result of inspiring rarefied air, says the Dietetic and Hygienic Gazette. The insufficient supply of oxygen in the rarefied air is perhaps the principal cause of the symptoms manifested. More or less prolonged residence in a rarefied atmosphere may be associated with an increase in the number of red blood cells.

CREMATIONS IN ENGLAND.

There Were $55 Last Year—Number Steadily Increasing.

The movement in favor of cremation in England continues to make slow but steady progress, writes the London correspondent of the New York Medical Journal. During 1909 the number of cremations carried out in Great Britain was $55, an advance of sixty as compared with 1908.

The first crematorium in England was opened at Woking in 1885 and the total number of cremations since that time is 8,121. There are now altogether thirteen crematoria in Great Britain and this number will probably soon be increased. The Cremation Society of England has been very active in its propaganda work and public interest is slowly being aroused.

Recently a cremation society was formed in Edinburgh. The object of the society is to promote the practice of cremation and burial reform by means of meetings, lectures and publications or otherwise. There are already about 150 members, including many well known persons.

The funeral took place on Wednesday from his late residence.

Henry Wilson, an aged and highly respected resident of Napanee passed away on Tuesday, after but a short illness, aged seventy-six years. Deceased was in his usual health on Sunday when he was taken suddenly ill and medical aid was of no avail. An old resident of this road in the person of Mr. Andrew Oliver has been prostrated with a stroke and now lies in a very critical condition. His two daughters have been summoned home, and as he is past eighty-seven the chances are he may not last long.

Mr. Bert Hudson is building a new drive house.

He Got the Money.

The following is an amusing story of young Prince Alexander of Battenberg while at Etobicoke.

"Like many other little boys he ran short of pocket money and wrote an ingenuous letter to his august grandmother Queen Victoria asking for some slight pecuniary assistance. He received in return a just rebuke, telling him that little boys should keep within their limits and that he must wait till his allowance next became due. Shortly afterward the undefeated little prince assumed the correspondence in something like the following form: 'My dear Grandmamma I am

Grow Hair.

In England, the ladies have entirely abandoned wearing rats, which is due entirely to this new discovery.

It has been proven that Henna leaves contain the ingredients that will positively grow hair. That they contain this long-looked-for article is proven every day.

The Americans are now placing on the market a preparation containing the extract from Henna leaves, which is having a phenomenal sale.

This preparation is called Salvia, and is being sold with a guarantee to cure Dandruff and to grow hair in abundance. Being daintily perfumed, Salvia makes a most pleasant hair dressing. Mr. Jessop, your druggist, is the first to import this preparation and a large generous bottle can be purchased for 50c.

On Thursday last, about noon, as Mr. and Mrs. D. McCullough were driving home from the city, the horse became frightened at a bale of wire lying near the roadside. The horse and wagon were cast upside down, with some damage to the latter, while the occupants of the rig had narrow escapes. Mr. McCullough sustained injuries which have confined him to his house for a few days—Kingston Whig.
